Nixon resigns as 37th President; Ford to take oath today at noon

A President steps down . . .

WITH AN AIR of determined optimism, President Nixon said his farewell to the nation Thursday night. Today at noon, he will become a former President of the United States and return to his home in California.

by BOB LAHEY

Richard Milhous Nixon, 37th President of the United States, abdicated his office last night with this final message to the nation:

"May God's grace be with you in all the days ahead."

In a message anticipated since the final devastating evidence of his participation in the Watergate coverup was made public Monday, the President said he would depart his office at noon today, at which time Vice President Gerald Ford will become the 38th President.

NIXON, repeating a familiar phrase that he has "never been a quitter," declared that leaving office is "abhorrent to every instinct in my body." But, he said, he was compelled to put the interests of America first.

He made only veiled references to his misconduct in the aftermath of the Watergate burglary, which led to his becoming the first President ever to abandon his office.

At one point he said he regretted deeply "any injuries" he might have caused the nation. But, he said, "If some of my decisions were wrong—and some were wrong"—they were made in the belief that they were in the best interests of the nation.

DISPLAYING none of physical signs of stress that have been attributed to him in recent appearances, the President spoke in steady and measured tones, although there was an unmistakable timbre of emotion in his televised comments.

This was evident when he spoke of more than a quarter century of public service and added with obvious reference to the events that led to his departure from office: "Sometimes I have succeeded; sometimes I have failed."

In what was widely described as a conciliatory speech to the nation, Mr. Nixon acknowledged the "great sadness" that his decision to resign caused him. But he expressed confidence in Ford and asked the "understanding, patience, and cooperation of all Americans" for the new President.

NIXON GAVE as the chief reason for his resignation the erosion of support for him in the Congress. That support dis-

Ford silent at first; says he's ready

WASHINGTON (UPI)—A solemn Vice President Gerald R. Ford emerged from a momentous hour-long meeting with President Nixon in the Oval Office Thursday where a White House aide said he was formally informed of the President's intention to resign.

Alone and solemn-faced, Ford strode across the street to seclusion in his own office in the Executive Office Building without speaking to reporters clustered in a light rain on the lawn.

Minutes later, House Democratic Leader Thomas P. O'Neill said Ford will be sworn in as the 38th U.S. President Friday afternoon.

Sec. of State Henry A. Kissinger called on Ford in his office at the Executive Office Building shortly before 2 p.m.

A look at Gerry Ford: his life and our future. Page 9.

CDT. A spokesman said the meeting was arranged at the Vice President's request.

FORD HAD BEEN summoned to the White House after completing a medal of honor awards ceremony in nearby Blair House. Reporters swarmed around him as he left there, but he only shook his head at their shouted questions.

Earlier, he had canceled plans for a flying trip to the West Coast and other areas.

Ford had maintained for two days the self-imposed silence he pledged Monday on all questions relating to Nixon, impeachment or resignation.

But in an interview published Thursday in the New York Times, he was asked if he was prepared for the job if it should come about.

"No question about it," Ford was quoted as replying. "I think I have worked real hard . . . I've been to every department, met with the secretary and top staff of every department of government, at their place, not at mine . . . I don't know what more I could have done."

FORD WILL BE the first U.S. President not chosen by popular election. He was selected by Nixon Oct. 12, 1973, to replace Spiro T. Agnew, who resigned after pleading no contest to a charge of tax evasion.

Ford was sworn in as Vice President Dec. 6, and has spent much of his time since then traveling around the nation in an effort to unify and rally the scandal-shattered Republican party.

The Vice President's normally talkative staff either was hard to reach or unable to respond to questions. But the night before, press aide Paul Milich denied that the staff had been told to prepare for the Presidency.

Ford was reported to have been told by White House Chief of Staff Alexander Haig Wednesday that he should prepare himself for a transition of power. One of the first tasks facing him would be to select his own Vice President — to complete the first non-elected administration ever.

Legionnaires react to resignation

'We grew up believing the President's right'

by DOUG RAY

There were many up to the very end who didn't believe President Nixon would really quit.

And when he told the country over national television, the bartender said in a low, almost choking voice, "dammit."

At the Arlington Heights American Legion Hall Thursday night, dozens played Bingo while the President told the world he would step aside. At the same time, Legionnaires talked about the man to whom they had given their vote to carry their flag and their thoughts. To them, the fall of Richard M. Nixon was something very chilling.

Minutes before the announcement, Joe Hurley, one of the post officers, wasn't sure the President really would go through with it. "Maybe he'll just step aside for awhile . . . he's a strong man, but when you see these things come out, I just don't know." He shook his head and talked about the man in whom he had placed his trust.

"It's pretty hard to accept this. We grew up with the idea the country is always right and the President, too," said Hurley.

"I'll tell you one thing, Nixon's a good man to have in your corner—at least when it comes to foreign affairs. If Ford comes in, I just hope he'll be a good one. I guess only time will tell."

Then there was H. C. Kibbie, 75, a man who has seen many a president come and go and every year he loses a bit more respect for them all; in fact, all politicians. "Sure I voted for Nixon

. . . I had no other choice because of the other guy."

The end for Richard Nixon finally was announced to the crowd over a public address system, but no one seemed to really take much notice. Four or five persons let out a sigh, or what might be interpreted as a moan, but dozens didn't stop the ritual of their game.

"These Bingo people are a different breed," observes Joe Hurley. He doesn't understand how they can be so unconcerned.

'People are concerned about America'

AFTERMATH:

While I have never urged the President to resign, I certainly can understand his reasons in view of the apparent overwhelming opposition to his continuing in office. I am personally very sorry that Richard Nixon's public service has ended in such a tragic fashion.

Although history will recall his misdeeds, I hope Americans both today and in future years will give him credit for his accomplishments during his career in the House, the Senate, as Vice President and President.

I join the many friends and former colleagues of our new President, Gerald Ford, in offering my support and my prayers.

—U.S. Rep. Philip M. Crane

I view the President's resignation with mixed emotions. It is certainly a tragedy that Richard Nixon, a man who has made so many contributions to his country as a veteran of World War II, a congressman, a senator, a Vice President and a President should end his career with a resignation under extreme pressure.

I am certain that history will look kindly on many of the accomplishments of Richard Nixon, including his courageous new policies with Russia and China, designed to avoid a nuclear showdown and to substitute negotiations for confrontation.

History will also view kindly his successful efforts in extricating the United States from an ill-conceived participation in the Indo-China war. This was accomplished under most difficult circumstances.

In addition, there is a human side to the situation which involves the man personally, his wife, his children and his relatives. I extend to the members of the Nixon family my sympathy.

On the other hand, we must judge fairly and place the blame where it should fall. Richard Nixon is now paying for the mistakes that he made in attempting to cover up the connection of the Committee to Reelect the President with the Watergate break-in. He compounded his problems by misrepresenting the facts to the American people and the Congress.

I am pleased that the President has chosen to resign. It will eliminate an acrimonious impeachment proceeding.

It should be acknowledged that even though the President resigned, the constitutional process of impeachment caused the resignation. We must continue to have great admiration for the type of government we have, which operated effectively and fairly with due process for all.

I think the nation is fortunate to have an outstanding person in Vice President Ford to assume the Presidency and to carry out the policies which have been approved by the voters of this country in the 1972 elections. Because of my personal acquaintanceship with Vice President Ford, I have great confidence in his ability to unite our nation, to assist us to overcome inflation, and to continue to provide leadership for peace throughout the world.

—U.S. Rep. Samuel H. Young

This is a time of sadness — and hope, too. It is time we got on with the work of preserving peace, restoring the economy, reordering the national priorities, and reforming our political institutions.

And we have reason for renewed confidence in our system of self-government and law.

Gerald Ford will assume the Presidency with my prayers and the respect his high office deserves. He will have my support when he is right, my opposition when he is wrong. I join with all Americans in wishing him well.

—U.S. Sen. Adlai E. Stevenson, III

I think the President has made the right decision — right for the country, right for his family, right for himself.

The unambiguous evidence of wrongdoing has grown so compelling in recent days that his departure from office was inevitable. It is important to understand and remember that the Nixon presidency was brought down finally by the President's own words and actions.

I believe the democratic process has worked and for that I am grateful. But there are scores of human tragedies in Watergate, and tonight my heart goes out to Mr. Nixon's fine family, which has stood so loyally by him through this long and difficult period.

Gerald Ford is a good and decent man. He has my full support as he begins to draw our country back together.

—U.S. Sen. Charles H. Percy

I pledge my full support to Gerald Ford for the success of his administration as President of the United States.

President Nixon's historic action in resigning his office opens a new era and offers each of us a challenge we must accept.

Let us move forward, putting revenge and recrimination behind us, resolved to achieve a government which embodies the finest traits of the American character. Let us resolve that when we differ, we shall respect the motives of our opponents and their right to differ with us, that when we have power, we shall have humility, and that we shall seek what is best for the nation rather than what is best for party, faction or self.

With our sights high, our spirits cleansed and our hopes renewed, let us create that America which is achievable if we apply our vision, our conscience, our courage and our diligence.

—George Burditt, Candidate for U.S. Senator

The person who has brought government to a standstill and made it impossible to function even at the most fundamental level is out of the office. There will be a collective sigh of relief from the country. However, the problems unfortunately will not all go away with Richard M. Nixon. I would hope they would be solved by the new man working with the Congress, the President and candidates have to try to find solutions to the biggest set of problems, which I believe are economical.

I am not very sanguine about what has come forward from Vice President Ford. Nor am I very sanguine about his track record as a congressman. Congress and the electorate have to be as vigorous as possible. I am hopeful, but not optimistic. I hope he will not only reject the philosophy of Watergate, but also the economic policies which have brought us to this point.

At the risk of being the rainmaker at the picnic, the problems are still there.

—Abner J. Milva, Candidate for Congress

I am distressed that the executive branch of government deteriorated so badly that the resignation of the President became inevitable, but with America in such turmoil there was no course except for Mr. Nixon to be immediately removed from power.

Actions for the good of the people should have been considered by Mr. Nixon while he was in office, not as he prepared to resign. I would have preferred Mr. Nixon to invoke the 25th Amendment and give Mr. Ford temporary control of the government while impeachment proceedings were in progress.

The American people are being left with too many unanswered questions. Our nation is now relieved of the burden of Richard M. Nixon, Spiro Agnew and many of their loyal aides. The miseries brought about by the self-serving interests of those people will be on our shoulders for some time to come, but now, under the direction of President Ford, we again concern ourselves with what's good for this country. We are partially out from the shadow.

Our domestic problems, distrust of government, inflation, the high cost of living, the careful selection of our new vice president and other officials, can now receive the high priority they deserve.

This is not the time to consider political gains or losses, but the time when we must all consider what is good for America. That is the job ahead of all of us.

—Betty Spencer, Candidate for Congress

Nixon cheered on visits to suburbs

Richard M. Nixon visited the Northwest suburbs three times during his political career. Each time, the crowds cheered. Each time, they loved him.

He came once as a presidential candidate, twice as the President. He talked of law and order, fighting pollution and back in 1968, of stopping rising prices. As a candidate he told a crowd of high school students, "You will be a great generation and we will give you the leadership you deserve."

His visits drew welcoming crowds to Prospect High School in Mount Prospect — Oct. 19, 1968, and Oct. 29, 1970, and to the Schaumburg Airport Feb. 6, 1970. Northwest suburban residents lined up hours ahead of time hoping to see him and maybe shake his hand.

THE FIRST TIME, Mount Prospect was a stop along the campaign trail and Nixon brought Pat with him. Some 10,000 persons gave up a Saturday morning to hear the Republican candidate and his political pitch.

"I had a feeling as I came through the crowd," Nixon began, "and I feel it now... It is a sense of victory in the air."

"People are concerned about America," he said, "and when the Republican administration gets into office I pledge this to you, the American flag will not be a doormat for anybody."

He recalled the Eisenhower years and blamed the "men who stumbled through the sixties" for the state of voter discontent.

"You cannot name one area of the world where respect for this country is not low," he said. "The American people know this and they are fed up to here and they're going to vote against the administration that put us where we are today."

THE NEXT TIME he arrived, Nixon was President. It was obvious as 105 uniformed policemen controlled a 6,000-person crowd at the Schaumburg Airport on a cold, damp winter morning. This time his destination was the Hanover Park Water Reclamation Plant, a stop on a suburban anti-pollution tour. First, he made a short speech to the crowd. Wearing no overcoat, the President shook hands and then hopped on the hood of a station wagon, the nearest available podium. He gave a new version of the traditional three R's: reform, restore and renewal.

"Restore our natural resources and renew the spirit of Americans," he said, speaking through a hand microphone connected to fog horns because the public address system wasn't working.

President Nixon returned to the Northwest suburbs seven months later. This time, a White House crowd and Secret Service men arrived a week before him to set up security at the high school auditorium. And this time police were investigating a threat against the President's life, which later proved unfounded.

UNLIKE HIS FIRST two visits, the speeches made by the President weren't exactly for himself. He was plugging the campaign of Sen. Ralph Smith, Republican candidate against Adlai Stevenson III.

The President's speech had a familiar ring. Just as he had done for other Republican candidates in the 1970 election, he told the crowd of 4,000 he needed Smith, who was later defeated, to carry out his promises.

"The President of the United States is the most powerful man in the world," Nixon said. "But he can't carry out his programs by himself. He needs help from Senators and Congressmen who will support the programs the people want him to initiate."

Chiding, but not naming, Smith's opponent, Nixon told the crowd the nation needs "law and order men all year long, not just at election time." His speech was interrupted several times, but the longest applause came when he said law enforcement officers should be given respect and backing.

The President repeated his plan to develop "prosperity and peace and progress without war and inflation. People want action now," he said. "That's why I was elected in 1968."

As Nixon left the high school and passed by the group, they shouted, "Give Peace a Chance." The President simply smiled, and flashed back his victory sign.

Vice presidential speculation is bubbling

From Herald news services

Conservative Republican senators presented Vice President Gerald Ford yesterday a list of 13 men and one woman they could support as his vice president. The list did not include the name of former New York Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller, who has been prominently mentioned as Ford's first choice.

The author of the letter which was hand-delivered to Ford's office, asked that his name not be used. He said the list was drawn up with the approval of at least six conservative GOP senators.

The 13 men listed were: Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., the first name on the list which also included Sens. James Buckley, N.Y.; William Brock, Tenn.; Howard Baker, Tenn.; Deway Bartlett, Okla.; Marlow Cook, Ky.; and Hugh Scott, Pa.; Govs. Ronald Reagan of California and Thomas Meskill of Connecticut; former Sen. John Williams of Delaware; Treasury Secretary William Simon, Rep. Albert Quie of Minnesota, and Rep. Edith Green of Oregon.

The source of the letter said it was composed by conservatives as a result of news media speculation that Ford was leaning in the direction of "someone like

Nelson Rockefeller

Sen. Barry Goldwater

Rockefeller or former Atty. Gen. Richardson.

Rockefeller is the early front runner in vice presidential speculation which began days before Nixon scheduled last night's national television address to announce his resignation.

Ford is considered a conservative with good friends in the liberal wing of the party. Rockefeller is his opposite number — a liberal who has mended his fences with most conservatives.

His appointment would thus help unify the Republicans and would be more acceptable than many to Democrats who control Congress, where the new Vice President must be confirmed.

It is by no means certain that Rockefeller is the choice however. Persons close to Sen. Lowell Weicker, R-Conn., think lightning will strike their man. But others argue that both he and Sen. Howard Baker, R-Tenn., a party moderate, can be eliminated because of their identification with the Senate Watergate Committee whose televised hearings last summer first brought out the possibility of Nixon involvement in the scandal.

Republican liberals being mentioned in news accounts and in the corridors of the capitol include Sens. Charles Percy of Illinois, whose unannounced aim of seeking presidential nomination is now ashes; Rep. John Anderson of Illinois, a widely respected but little-known House leader; former Atty. Gen. Elliot Richardson or former deputy Atty. Gen. William French Smith, both of whom were fired by Nixon for refusing to fire former Special Prosecutor Archibald Cox last fall.

Moderates Melvin Laird, former Ford colleague in the House Republican leadership who was Secretary of Defense in Nixon's first term, and former New York Sen. Charles Goodell of New York, whom Nixon read out of the party in 1970 for his vocal opposition to the Vietnam War, are moderates being mentioned for the job.

Jaworski: No agreement with Nixon

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Watergate Prosecutor Leon Jaworski, who presumably would have a say in whether criminal charges are brought against President Nixon, said Thursday he had "no agreement or understanding of any sort," that led to Nixon's resignation.

In a statement telephoned to the news media immediately following Nixon's resignation speech, Jaworski said he knew ahead of time Nixon would step down — but added he had no role in that decision.

"There has been no agreement or understanding of any sort between the President or his representatives and the special prosecutor relating in any way to the President's resignation," Jaworski said.

Jaworski said that "although I was informed of the President's decision this afternoon, my office did not participate in any way in the President's decision to resign."

There has been speculation this week that Nixon, in weighing whether to resign under fire or stay in office until impeachment had run its course in Congress, perhaps had begun plea bargaining with the prosecutors to win immunity in return for his resignation.

Jaworski's statement apparently was designed to scotch such speculation. There are efforts underway in Congress, however, to enact a resolution urging that no criminal prosecution be undertaken against Nixon once he leaves office.

As a private citizen, Nixon immediately will become liable to indictment should a grand jury choose to charge him. The Watergate grand jury already has named him an indicted co-conspirator in the cover-up for which six of his former aides are due to go on trial Sept. 9.

Federal law, however, does not bar co-conspirators from being indicted later in the same case.

Nixon resigns; Ford to take oath today appeared rapidly after the release of White House tapes that show that the President had assented to attempts to cover up the break-in at the Watergate as early as six days after it occurred.

"In the past few days," he said, "it has become evident to me that I no longer have a strong enough political base to continue" the effort to lead the nation.

But, he added, "I leave with no bitterness toward those who opposed me." In what was regarded as the most magnanimous phase of his farewell address, the President said he understood that those who opposed him were motivated by the same concern for the nation's well-being that he believed he had demonstrated.

The President also referred to his diplomatic accomplishments with Russia and China, the end of the war in Vietnam, and his hopes that the legacy of his presidency would be a continuing peace. He expressed the hope that "all of our children will have a better chance" to live their lives with world peace.

THE PRESIDENT'S resignation brought to a halt the impeachment proceedings which in recent days had appeared to be leading certainly to his conviction and removal from office.

There remained, however, the specter of criminal proceedings that may yet dog him.

Following Nixon's nationwide television appearance, special Watergate prosecutor Leon Jaworski issued a statement emphasizing that there had been no arrangements made to halt the Watergate investigation, and no agreement to give President Nixon immunity from prosecution.

Wholesale price takes big jump

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Wholesale prices took their biggest jump in 11 months in July, the government reported Thursday, probably foreshadowing still another round of price increases at the consumer level.

Farm products and industrial goods paced the 3.9 per cent rise in the wholesale price index in July, according to the report from the Labor Department's Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Wholesale prices for farm products, processed foods and meats increased by 6.8 per cent from June levels, the report said, while industrial commodities rose 2.7 per cent. The only decline for farm goods was in dairy products.

The overall increase in the index was the biggest since August of last year, when it registered a 5.8 per cent gain, and pushed it to 20.4 per cent above the same period a year ago. Adjusted for seasonal changes, the July rise was 3.7 per cent.

HANDING OVER THE $20 that Herald writer Barry Sigale won Thursday in the first Illinois Lottery drawing is Joe Bodor of The Book Store in downtown Arlington Heights. Sigale won the prize by matching three of the five numbers on his ticket in the Weekly Lotto game with three of the five numbers drawn by Gov. Daniel Walker at the Illinois State Fair in Springfield. "If you want to take an unusual picture of him," said a friend of Sigale's passing by the bookstore, "take one of him paying what he owes, instead of collecting."

Who's the first big winner in lottery? Why, it's ME!

by BARRY SIGALE

The day started out the same as most other days. More money left my wallet than went in.

But, thanks to Gov. Daniel Walker and the men and women with great foresight who thought of the idea, I won $20 Thursday in the first Illinois Lottery drawing at the state fair in Springfield.

Me. A compulsive gambler. One who loses all investments from parlay cards to poker games to such office pool questions as:

- What day and time will President Nixon make his inevitable speech to the nation that he is resigning?
- When will a fellow reporter have her first baby?
- Who will win the Kentucky Derby, World Series and Super Bowl?
- You name it.

WALKER DID the honors during the historic occasion. He picked the numbers that made a $20 winner out of me . . . 12, 16 and 18. They came in clear over The Herald's UPI wire with a Springfield dateline.

They were three of the five numbers drawn for the Weekly Lotto game. The rules say match any three of the five numbers picked (the other numbers were 04 and 15) with three of the numbers on your lottery ticket and you win 20 bucks. Marvelous, I did that. I won.

Everyone in the office came over to see the numbers and compare them to the numbers on their tickets. I told them of my good fortune. These are the same people who took my money in all our other gambling ventures.

"Aw, you dog," said one of my colleagues.

"I hate you," said another.

WHAT DO THEY care? I was the one who put up the money for the ticket in the first place. Three dollars for six 50-cent tickets. The winning ticket I purchased on the first day of sales last Tuesday at the Beacon Tap in Des Plaines. It was lucky that I did. I was doing a story on the lottery and people's opinions about their chances of winning. When I got up to leave I figured, what-the-heck, I might as well buy a ticket. Thank you.

I called my wife, Judy at the school where she teaches, after I verified that I had won. She answered the telephone in the office.

"What the matter? Is Jennifer sick? she sounded alarmed.

"No, we won $20 in the lottery," I assured her.

"Ha, ha," she suddenly bellowed out to all around her and I could imagine them all rushing to her side with smelling salts. "We won, everybody. I told you we would win. Ha, ha, I knew it. We won $20. Yippee."

"It's only $20," I repeated, embarrassed that she might have thought I said we had won $20,000.

"I know," she answered. "It's great."

Decision expected by December

Progress slow in W. Strong St. suit

The W. Strong Street zoning suit is still in court with final resolution of the case expected by December, about a year-and-a-half after the trial was completed.

Residents in the W. Strong Street area are appealing a court decision issued in April, 1973, which allows 47 six-flat apartments to be built on scattered lots in their neighborhood. The appeal is progressing slowly, with the last written argument filed last week.

Attorney John Burke, representing the residents, said he expects oral arguments to take place in late September or early October.

"Whenever the court has time, they will set it for oral arguments. It can vary from one to several months before the decision will come down," Burke said, noting that he did not expect a decision until November or December.

THE LENGTH and expense of the appeal procedure has had its toll on the group of residents that originally challenged the village's decision to zone the area for apartments. While a small group of residents is continuing the suit, others have dropped out for financial reasons, and some have sold their homes and moved away.

Burke, however, declined to say how many residents are continuing with the suit. He also declined to comment on the arguments being presented in the appeal except to say "basically the trial court was in error."

While no figures were available on the cost of the suit to the residents, the village has paid at least $10,441.20 in legal fees in the case.

Village Mgr. George Passolt said he does not have a full accounting of the legal fees paid to attorney Jack Siegel, who defended the village in the suit. Last May, the village paid Siegel $7,421.49 for trial work. This month the village paid Siegel an additional $3,019.80 for work on the appeal.

PASSOLT SAID the village has had other expenses associated with the case, such as the cost of printing the village's appeal brief. The village also paid Rolf Siegel to testify as the village's expert land planner.

Plans to bring sewer and water lines to the W. Strong Street neighborhood also have been delayed by the appeal. The major part of the utility lines are to be installed by developer Victor Smigel, who is planning to build the six-flat apartments.

The village has proposed installing lines in sections not affected by Smigel's development, but these lines cannot be laid until Smigel's part of the project is completed.

Smigel has halted all work on the apartments until the suit is settled, and the foundations for the buildings have been sitting unattended for more than two years.

More residents in the area currently are using wells and septic systems.

Mrs. Reid's replacement

Susan Rose gets school board job

Susan Tripp Rose of Buffalo Grove will complete the term of School Dist. 21 Board of Education member Mary Jo Reid which expires next April. Mrs. Reid resigned earlier this summer to take a full-time, paid position with the district.

Mrs. Rose, 33, of 174 Timber Hill Rd., was appointed to the school board Thursday night. She was picked for the job from among seven candidates who were interviewed by the school board last week.

An active volunteer and PTA board member at Alcott School, Buffalo Grove, Mrs. Rose said in her interview that she is especially interested in heightening the school board's awareness of community concerns.

MRS. ROSE SUGGESTED school board members offer to speak at meetings of community organizations about education matters in the district. She also has recommended board members try to spend time at various local schools talking with teachers, students and parents.

A resident of the district for six years, Mrs. Rose is a member of the Buffalo Grove Junior Woman's Club, the American Assn. of University Women and has served on the Dist. 21 Citizen's Task Force on Education.

Mrs. Rose received a bachelor's degree in biology and master's degree in school administration from Indiana University. She is a former substitute teacher in Dist. 21 schools.

IN REPLACING Mrs. Reid, Mrs. Rose will serve on the Dist. 21 school board until the regular school board election next April.

Mrs. Reid began her job this week as public relations and volunteer coordinator for the district. She submitted her resignation from the school board last month, after serving for almost nine years.

Cornwell MacArthur assistant principal

The Prospect Heights School Dist. 23 Board of Education Wednesday night appointed Phillip Cornwell, 32, as assistant principal of MacArthur Junior High School for the 1974-75 school year.

Cornwell was recommended to the board by Supt. Edward Grodzki, and Thomas Rich, after being chosen from a field of 15 candidates for the position.

Cornwell, a 1963 graduate of Knox College, received his Master of Education degree from Loyola University last spring.

He taught in a Peoria Junior high school for three years, and spent the last six years teaching English at Glenbrook North High School.

The position pays $13,000 annually.

The board also approved the hiring of four replacement teachers and appointed two persons — a librarian and a learning disabilities teacher — to newly-created positions.

In other action, the board accepted a bid from Hedlin's Dairy, Madison, Wis., to supply milk to district schools for the coming school year.

Hedlin's, the only company to offer a bid, will supply whole milk for 8.75 cents per half pint.

Man dies of gun wound in suicide try

Charles R. McKim, the Wheeling man who shot himself with a rifle Wednesday in a Mount Prospect hotel room, died about 12 hours later at Bihings Hospital in Chicago.

A hospital spokesman Thursday said McKim died at 2:15 p.m. Wednesday.

McKim, formerly of 571 Fairway View Dr., Wheeling, has been a resident at the hotel since July 16. Police evacuated eight rooms so no one else would be injured.

$80 in electrician's supplies stolen

Electrician John Simonelli Wednesday reported the theft of about $80 worth of electrician's supplies, while he was working at the offices of the Buffalo Grove Park District, 150 Raupp Blvd.

Police said Simonelli left the supplies in front of the building for about half an hour, and they were missing when he returned.

No arrests have been made. Simonelli has reportedly told police he will not sign a complaint.

CTA lower-fare cards ready at village hall

The Wheeling Village Hall is now a registration center for senior citizen reduced-fare permits on the Chicago Transit Authority.

Persons applying for reduced-fare permits must be 65 and produce proof of age such as a birth certificate, marriage license, drivers license, baptismal certificate or passport. A Medicare card is not acceptable proof of age.

Applicants also must produce a social security card or a copy of the number and a recent photograph that will easily identify the person.

For further information on the reduced-fare permits, residents should call the village clerk at 537-2141 or inquire at the village hall, 255 W. Dundee Rd.

Burglar steals $400 in watches, sunglasses

Wheeling police are seeking a burglar, who stole $400 worth of Timex wristwatches and sunglasses from the Ben Franklin Store, 1920 S. Wolf Rd.

Police said the burglar apparently gained entry late Tuesday or early Wednesday morning, by throwing a rock through the store's glass entrance.

The store closed at 9 p.m. Tuesday, and the burglary was not discovered until 9 a.m. Wednesday, when it was reopened.

Sent to Bakalis Thursday

Report denies child abuse charges at Dwyer School

by KATHERINE BOYCE

Charges of child abuse at Dwyer School in Arlington Heights are denied in a report sent to State School Supt. Michael Bakalis Thursday by the school's governing board.

The report reaffirms the board's support of John Whipple, former clinical director of Dwyer School, whose certificate for school psychology was suspended Wednesday by Cook County Schools Supt. Richard Martwick.

Martwick suspended the certificate following an investigation of charges of improper operation of the school for emotionally disturbed children. The charges, which came from teachers and former teachers at Dwyer, included child abuse, improper certification of some of the staff at Dwyer and unprofessional activities by some of the staff in the presence of the children.

THURSDAY'S REPORT was prepared following an investigation of the charges by members of the governing board of the Northwest Educational Cooperative

(NEC), which operates Dwyer School.

In its report the board "categorically denies that deliberate use of unusual or excessive force" occurred at the school in recent months and it "reiterates its support of John Whipple as school psychologist and believes results he has obtained with these children attests to his competence in the prescription of proper therapy."

The board acknowledges in the report that "accidental injury" to students and teachers can happen in a school for emotionally disturbed children and that several of the instances of injury to children listed in the charges were caused by accident.

Charges of child abuse have been "exposed to be overstated or fallacious" according to the report and four specific child abuse charges against Whipple were refuted.

THE BOARD ANSWERED the charge of improper certification by saying in the report that it would continue to hire uncertified personnel on a temporary basis

if it could not hire certified staff members. Two uncertified staff members are now employed at Dwyer.

One of the teachers said Thursday she was surprised by portions of the governing board report. The teacher, who asked not to be identified, said there is a fine line between therapeutic and non-therapeutic punishment, but added "Some of what I saw was child abuse." She said she was "100 per cent sure" the charges she made involved child abuse. "I'm sure much of this is open to a great deal of interpretation," she said. "I think this is what the board is trying to do."

Whipple and his attorney are out-of-town and could not be reached for comment. Whipple has until Aug. 16 to appeal the suspension of his certificate to the State Teacher Certification Board. The board can reinstate the certificate, suspend or revoke it.

Officials in Martwick's office and Bakalis's office said they are withholding comment on the NEC report until they have a chance to review it.

Zoning group to enter Liebling issue?

The Wheeling Road Zoning Committee will attempt to intervene next week in the court annexation battle over 40 acres owned by Arnold Liebling near the northeast corner of Wheeling and Camp McDonald roads.

If the committee is permitted to intervene, as Liebling was so permitted in 1971, it would open the possibility of a rehearing of the case or an appeal filed by the homeowners group.

Circuit Court Judge Raymond K. Berg on July 18 ruled that the Village of Wheeling's 1971 annexation of the Liebling property was proper and that the lawsuit fighting the annexation had been filed too late (about 45 days after annexation) by the State's Attorney's office.

The State's Attorney's office represented the Wheeling Road Zoning Committee in contesting the annexation.

AT A POST-TRIAL conference Thursday, Ralph Berkowitz of the State's Attorney's office told members of the Wheeling Road Zoning Committee that a decision had not yet been made on whether the State's Attorney's office would appeal Judge Berg's decision. The deadline for such an appeal is Aug. 15.

Wheeling Road Zoning Committee member Max Lyle told Berkowitz, "If we are not allowed to intervene, we will fully expect the State's Attorney's office to seek a rehearing or an appeal."

The homeowners have fought the Liebling annexation primarily because of the apartment zoning Wheeling had given Liebling shortly after the annexation. Their legal objection was that the annexation was illegal because the property is adjacent to Wheeling only at one point.

Berkowitz said he had expected a compromise agreement to be accepted by both sides before Berg ruled and he said there are hopes an agreement is still possible. "We still are interested, if possible, to work out a settlement," he said, speaking for the State's Attorney's office.

Late school signup Aug. 28

Late registration for St. Joseph the Worker School, Wheeling, will be conducted Aug. 28 from 10 a.m. to noon at the school, 171 W. Dundee Rd.

All parents who want to enroll their children for the upcoming 1974-75 school year, but who did not do so last spring, may enroll children at the late registration, said principal John Topper.

Along with late registration, the school will also sponsor a book exchange and a uniform sale. Students who ordered uniforms earlier may pick them up at registration.

The book exchange will allow students to purchase used textbooks, Topper said.

Tuition for the school year will be the same as last year. Charges are $200 for one child, $250 for two, $300 for three and $25 for each additional student in the same family.

Parents interested in arranging for bus service for their children also may do so on the registration day.

Classes for all students at St. Joseph's are scheduled to begin Tuesday, Sept. 3, from 8:45 to 11:50 a.m. The first full day of classes will be Sept. 4.

The doctor says

by Lawrence E. Lamb, M.D.

He wants to put on weight

I'm sure that you've heard this problem many times before, but I still need help in finding an answer. I'm a male, 19, and completely healthy except I'm skinny as a rail. Well, not quite—but I'm 5 feet 7 inches and only weigh 120 pounds. I eat three full meals a day. I literally eat more than anyone else in my dorm—but I just can't seem to gain a pound.

I'm active. I play sports regularly. What's wrong? Ann Landers said that most thin people inherit their frames, and there is absolutely nothing they can do about it. However, both of my parents were on a diet to lose excess weight!

I'm sick of stuffing myself and seeing no results. Do you have any suggestions? I've seen advertisements for pills that are guaranteed to help you gain weight, but I find it hard to believe. Do you know of any pills that really work?

Yes, I seem to have heard that story somewhere before. And, Ann Landers notwithstanding, you can do something about it. It is true that you inherit a tendency to be thin or heavy. You can see this in the animal kingdom, too. Just look at the basic difference in a beef cow and a dairy cow. One is heavy and the other fine boned without so much muscle. But, you can grow muscles in spite of your heredity.

But, first let me say that your parents' overweight problem may be due to their age. At their age their bodies are not as active as yours is, and it is a somewhat different problem. It is more important how thin they were when they were your age, not what is going on now. And, I'm not impressed that you are so skinny. For your height you can't expect to weigh a lot with a normal life style, unless you get fat. I don't think much of being fat, for either appearance or health.

Part of your problem is your physical activity. It is fine to be active, and it helps keep your body in a good state of health. But, you won't grow heavy muscles with most types of sports, such as tennis, swimming, running or handball, to mention a few. These will all build some muscle and are good for body endurance.

MOST PEOPLE apparently don't understand that endurance exercise (most sports and running) does NOT develop large muscles. The only way to grow even bigger muscles is to progressively load the muscles to near maximum ability. These are the weightlifting type of exercises. Each time you make the muscle contract under an increased load it grows a little bigger. The biggest the cross section area of the muscle, the stronger it is.

Eating excess food without strength training will only make you fat. You need strength-type exercises—then you will stimulate your muscles to grow.

Those pills are another "rip-off" of people who are interested in their health. Most of them are vitamins or proteins, and you can get those in sufficient abundance for good muscle growth from a normal diet. All that extra protein is used by your body as so many calories. It won't build a muscle or help it get stronger without a combined training program.

Many of these products are sold with a plan or an exercise device. You would do just as well in most instances with the exercise program and not taking the pills at all. You might try the local YMCA for help in instruction on strength-type exercise and weight training.

Visitation for Gustaf R. Nordin, 73, of Des Plaines, is today from 4 to 9:30 p.m. in Lauterburg and Oehler Funeral Home, 2000 E. Northwest Hwy., Arlington Heights.

Funeral service will be held at 1 p.m. Saturday in the chapel of the funeral home. Burial will be in Ridgewood Cemetery, Des Plaines.

A retired electrical engineer for General Electric, Mr. Nordin was pronounced dead on arrival Wednesday morning at Northwest Community Hospital, Arlington Heights. He was born in New Haven, Conn., Jan. 18, 1901.

Surviving are his widow, Esther M., nee Soderling; a son, John (Bob) and daughter-in-law, Noreen Nordin of Arlington Heights; a daughter, Mrs. Ruth W. (Michael) Zervas of Evanston; four grandchildren; a brother, Roland of Connecticut, and a sister, Mrs. Agnes Lawyer of New York.

The guard changes, the nation survives

Ford:

Two-party support must prevail as country faces new President

by ROB LAHEY
Political Editor

So, finally, it has been put behind us. The sordid events which have dominated the news and the national consciousness probably more intensely than any other occurrence, excepting the nation's wars, have come to a finale which tears at the heart.

There is no joy in the way that the events collectively referred to as Watergate have been resolved, a resolution inconceivable to most Americans two years ago, but one which we now know to have been inevitable.

There is, however, hope that having brought about the resolution of those events through a careful pursuit of the nation's constitutional processes that this country will emerge strengthened in its dedication to the rule of law.

There is also, I believe, a measure of grace, which should not go unstated, in the man at the center of the maelstrom, Richard M. Nixon, who finally came to recognize the will of the nation and divested himself of the most powerful office in the world for the sake of his country.

History may record that as his most decent act.

Beyond that, there can be little doubt that the acts which led to the first removal of an American president were of extreme magnitude and fully justify the unhappy remedy which was forced upon him.

Now the nation must face the future.

And as it does, an awesome burden falls upon the shoulders of the new President, Gerald Ford of Michigan. He assumes not only the monumental responsibilities of the office, as have others before him who were called upon to take on the mantle of fallen presidents.

Gerald Ford has inherited the critical task of restoring to a shaken people the confidence in their government which has been wrested from them in the past two years.

But it is not a responsibility which belongs to him alone.

It now falls to every man and woman in public office to conduct themselves in their public trust in a manner which cannot be questioned.

Democrats and Republicans alike owe to the country, and to the new President, a spirit of unity, a generosity toward their fellow Americans, an assertion, if you will, of patriotism.

There is, at this time in the nation's history, no place for amiguess, no room for political expediency, no time for "I told you so," among those who opposed Richard Nixon from the start.

Neither is there time for recrimination, for justifications, for bitterness among those who were devoted to him.

We stand in danger of a continuing embattlement over whether Richard Nixon was unfairly treated or insufficiently punished.

It is probably unfortunate that the impeachment process was not carried to its culmination, that here will not be a clear and comprehensive record of the evidence which led to his conviction.

But it is clear to any reasonable person that he was fairly convicted in a tribunal which, when once aroused, has rarely failed this country in its decision — that of national opinion. That court waited patiently and agonizingly for proof of innocence, and finally was overwhelmed by the proof of guilt.

So, too, is it clear that the Congress waited, and waited, and finally in its collective mind reached a just decision.

The country will not be served by arguments that Richard Nixon was hounded from office by his enemies and a hostile press. Nor will it be benefited by those who would try to blame members of Richard Nixon's party for acts in which they had no part.

Those in every part of the political spectrum must resolve themselves that it was not the exposure of those acts, but the acts themselves — and they are now indisputable — were what led to the downfall of the President.

It is beyond my ability to say it better: "With malice toward none; with charity for all; with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in; to bind up the nation's wounds..."

Nixon:

Watergate and foreign triumphs marked his record as President

by TOM WELLMAN
Chief Editorial Writer

The six years and six months of the Richard Nixon presidency were often as controversial as the Watergate crisis which drove Nixon from office.

Both in the first-time accomplishments and the devastating failures of the regime, Nixon's presidency was a controversial presidency — and the imprint of the man and his six years will mark our politics and world history for a long time.

Watergate brought Nixon down — but the pioneering efforts to bring about world peace and international détente were regarded by some as achievements which will long overshadow the Watergate scandal.

When Richard M. Nixon and Spiro T. Agnew took office on Jan. 20, 1969, the Administration inherited the unpopular Vietnam War which had forced Nixon's predecessor, Lyndon Johnson, from seeking a second full term. The inaugural, in fact, was marred by scattered violence from protesters who would be heard often during the Nixon first term.

During the heated 1968 campaign against the Democrats' Hubert Humphrey, Nixon had mentioned a "secret plan" to end the Vietnam War. As President, Nixon named Henry Kissinger as a special foreign affairs adviser and one of Kissinger's responsibilities was to pursue that "plan" — at the conference table and in secret negotiations — with the Communists.

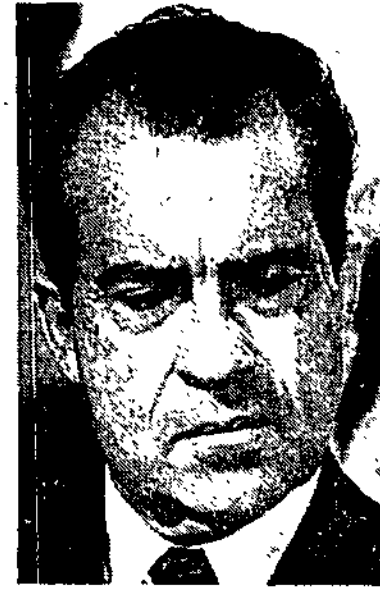

Four years later, Nixon and Kissinger announced that the tortuous path of negotiations had ended the war. As far as our country was concerned, our last soldiers were gone from that Asian nation.

During the Vietnam years, Nixon faced some of his sharpest public crises. In May, 1970, at the height of the anti-war movement, four students were shot to death by National Guardsmen at Kent State University in Ohio. The students had been protesting the American invasion of Cambodia, and their deaths set off a wave of protests at America's colleges and universities.

As the anti-war movement and the Vietnam War faded away, the President, again with the diplomacy of Kissinger, achieved perhaps his greatest triumph — the improvement of relations with Red China and the Soviet Union.

Kissinger started the normalization process by conducting top-secret talks with China's leaders within Red China.

In 1972, Nixon triumphantly visited both Communist nations, and détente was in full flower. The old dogma of anti-communism which had marked both the thinking of Nixon and American government melted away.

Nixon's achievements in the economic field, however, did not match his foreign policy triumphs. In August, 1971, after stop-gap measures had failed to slow inflation, Nixon announced wage and price controls to stem the floodtide of inflation. Later in the year, the controls were scaled down, and on January 11, 1973, all controls on the economy were ended.

Controls, however, didn't halt permanently the rising rate of inflation. Americans, at the grocery store and elsewhere, saw hard-earned dollars buying less and less. Nothing that the White House could do seemed to have much effect on the consumer's plight.

In the area of social reform, Nixon retreated from the ambitious social welfare goals of the Kennedy and Johnson administrations. His major concern was establishing a "law and order" team to fight crime.

Nixon also molded the U.S. Supreme Court to satisfy his conservative philosophy and constituency. By the end of his six years and six months in office, he had obtained a strict constructionist majority on the court.

However, he had also suffered one of his most embarrassing defeats, as two of his choices for the court — Clement Haynsworth and G. Harrold Carswell — had been rejected by a majority of the U.S. Senate.

During Nixon's first term, public support for Nixon fluctuated. In 1972, however, the Democrats nominated George McGovern, a liberal anti-war senator from South Dakota, to oppose him in November. Nixon projected, to his middle America constituency, an image of sober responsibility, while McGovern was unable to shed his image as an indecisive and radical candidate. Nixon swept into office in a record-breaking landslide.

As Nixon and Agnew were inaugurated, for the second time, on January 21, 1973, the only blemish was the July, 1972 break-in at the Watergate in Washington. The seven men arrested in the break-in had been linked back to the Committee to Reelect the President (CREEP).

However, the matter had never become the predominant issue during the 1972 Presidential campaign — and it appeared even more insignificant January 23, when Nixon announced that the Vietnam War was over.

Between January 1973 and August 1974, the public learned how deeply the White House had been involved in the burglary and the subsequent cover-up. The episodes are familiar: the McCord letter to Sirica, Dean's testimony to the Watergate committee, Archibald Cox and his firing, the 18½ minute tape gap, the White House transcripts — and the special indignity of Vice President Agnew's resignation and his "no contest" plea to tax evasion charges in October, 1973.

On July 27, 1974, the House Judiciary Committee voted to recommend to the full House the impeachment of Richard Nixon. Nine days later, impeachment and conviction became inevitable when Nixon revealed he had secreted away three tapes — and those tapes revealed he had lied to the Judiciary Committee and to the American people about how deeply he'd been involved in the Watergate cover-up.

It will be years before historians can gaze dispassionately at the Nixon presidency. Whatever the long view of Richard Nixon's six years and six months in office, one scandal — the Watergate affair — will be remembered from his presidency. It is a scandal which the record of his presidency will be unable to shed.

Herald opinion

Gerald Ford offers us a new beginning

The resignation of Richard M. Nixon as President of the United States marks the end of an agonizing and torturous moral crisis in leadership for this nation — and it must, too, mark a new beginning for American government.

Mr. Nixon's resignation, in the wake of Watergate-related disclosures and almost certain impeachment and conviction by the Congress was politically inevitable and absolutely necessary in order for leadership and dignity to be returned to the office of the president.

If Mr. Nixon had failed to resign, the nation would have been tied up for months in the impeachment process; whatever meager Presidential leadership and direction has been provided during the past few weeks would be drained even further during a lengthy trial in the U.S. Senate.

Mr. Nixon, in his historic decision to bypass the impeachment process and resign, has made a decision for the good of this country. We support that decision.

Little can be said at this point about the charges and evidence that led to Mr. Nixon's departure. It is best at this point to allow the tattered shreds of this blot on our American political process to be resolved in the courts.

For Gerald Ford, the living symbol of the fact that this nation's sturdy Constitution has survived every crisis facing it, the challenge will be difficult.

The American economy, riddled with inflation, lies perilously close to a serious recession. American foreign relations, advanced under the Nixon Administration, now require renewed attention and continued leadership in all fields.

Most important, though, is that Ford is a man of acknowledged integrity, who, by example, can clean up the office of the President and make it, once again, an office we can look to with respect.

We regret the personal suffering which Mr. Nixon and his family must endure, but the country as a whole is better served by his departure as President. We share the hope of all Americans that Gerald Ford, 38th President of the United States, is equal to the awesome challenges before him.

He only wanted to be Speaker of the House

'I'm a Ford—not a Lincoln'

by ROBERT M. ANDREWS

WASHINGTON (UPI) — To a nation weary and disillusioned from the Watergate ordeal, perhaps the strongest tonic that Gerald Rudolph Ford Jr. can offer the American people is his unquestioned reputation for old-fashioned, Midwestern honesty.

His great ambition, never realized, was to become speaker of the House of Representatives where he served for a quarter century, the last nine years as a hard-working popular Republican leader.

When President Nixon tapped him last October to succeed the disgraced Spiro T. Agnew, Ford swallowed his reluctance out of loyalty to his party and to Nixon, and won overwhelming approval of the House and Senate to be the nation's 40th vice president.

"I'm not at all interested in the vice presidency," he said then. "I love the House of Representatives, despite the long, irregular hours."

"Sometimes, though, when it's late and I'm tired and hungry, on that long drive home to Alexandria, as I go past 1600 Pennsylvania Ave., I do seem to hear a little voice saying: 'If you lived here, you'd be home now.'"

But Ford resisted the lure of that little voice, and insisted he never aspired to the White House Oval Office.

Now, at age 61, he is considered a near-certainty to be the GOP's presidential nominee in 1976.

Until Nixon finally made the fatal, climactic admission that he took part in the Watergate cover-up almost from the beginning, Ford staunchly defended Nixon and voiced confidence in the President's innocence of any wrongdoing.

At the same time, walking a delicate political tightrope, Ford staked out a position of independence by urging Nixon to cooperate fully with court and congressional demands for secret Watergate tapes.

FROM HIS PAST record in the House, Ford could be expected to pursue the general outlines of Nixon's foreign and conservative domestic policies. But Ford, observed one adviser, "is not a statesman — he's a politician."

Thus, given his past history of flexibility and compromise on legislative issues, some observers believe Ford would be an unknown quantity until he could put his own stamp on the presidency, much in the manner of Harry S. Truman, the little-known man from Missouri who succeeded Franklin D. Roosevelt.

The men Ford chose to be his closest advisers and Cabinet members might provide the best clue to the direction he would take.

As Watergate closed in on Nixon, it was widely reported that Ford might name former Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller of New York or former Attorney General Elliot L. Richardson as his vice president. Both are regarded ideological liberals compared to Ford.

Some observers believed that former Defense Secretary and White House counselor Melvin R. Laird and former Sen. Charles E. Goodell, R-N.Y., might also find a high position in a Ford administration.

A close political associate now in private life told UPI he believed Ford as President would be more liberal than during his years as a congressman, but would remain a fiscal conservative, and would rely more on his cabinet than Nixon.

LIBERALS GENERALLY have criticized Ford for opposing civil rights, housing, education and other social legislation in the House, and for his solid support of Johnson and Nixon administration policies in Vietnam.

Conservatives applauded his record of supporting a strong military defense, and his fights against costly Democratic spending programs have won him friends in the business community.

Ford's personal style has been characterized as dull, humorless and unimaginative. Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., said he found Ford "something of a plodder, not brilliant, not creative, but adequate, competent and reliable."

HIS DETRACTORS are fond of recalling the time when President Lyndon B. Johnson tapped Ford's head and said of the former college football star, "Too bad, too bad, that's what happens when you play football too long without a helmet."

Ford shrugs off the private sneaking about his intellect with the quiet, self-effacing confidence of a man whose Michigan constituents repeatedly returned him to Congress with majorities of more than 60 per cent.

"I'm a Ford, not a Lincoln," he said in his acceptance speech as Vice president. "I know they say I'm dull and have no charisma," he said later. "My only answer to that is that I'd rather be dull and sincere than have charisma and be phony."

Said one California Republican leader: "Things might be better if Richard Nixon had made that Whittier football team. Thank God Gerald Ford made the Michigan team. He's strong and he knows it. He won't have to prove his manhood."

FORD WAS born in Omaha, Neb., on July 14, 1913, as Leslie King. When his parents divorced, his mother took her infant son to Grand Rapids, Mich. There she married a small business man, Gerald Rudolph Ford Sr., who adopted the boy and gave him his name.

It was not until Ford was a high school senior that he learned he had another father, by then a rancher in Wyoming. Ford was washing dishes and serving hamburgers in a Grand Rapids restaurant for $2 a week when his real father walked in and introduced himself.

"That was quite a shock," Ford said later. "I'd never thought about it. I couldn't care less. From my earliest days, I always assumed that my stepfather was my real father."

Ford was a hard worker from the start. He helped his father in the family's new paint and varnish factory, became an Eagle Scout and captain of the high school football team, and was inspired by famed courtroom lawyer Clarence Darrow to dream of a political career.

Later he was star center for the University of Michigan's undefeated national championship football teams in 1932 and 1933, and was voted most valuable player as a senior in 1934.

Ford turned down professional offers from the Green Bay Packers and the Detroit Lions and entered Yale Law School, where he says he was a B-minus student.

From Yale he returned to Grand Rapids to practice law briefly before serving aboard the aircraft carrier Monterey in the Pacific during World War II. Released as a lieutenant commander after four years, he went back to his home town law practice.

AT THE URGING of Michigan's Republican Sen. Arthur H. Vandenberg, also from Grand Rapids, Ford in 1948 challenged and defeated his district's isolationist congressman, Republican Bartel Jonkmann. He ran as an internationalist supporting Truman's post-war Marshall Aid plan for European recovery.

Ford, his House seat secure, quickly made a name for himself as a tireless GOP party loyalist who did his homework on the issues and never went back on his word. He still likes to say that "truth is the glue on the bond that holds government together."

In 1963, after Barry M. Goldwater's disastrous defeat had left House Republicans in shattered disarray, Ford toppled Charles A. Halleck of Indiana as House GOP leader with the help of a band of young party activists eager to give the GOP a new image.

Throughout his House leadership years under Nixon, Ford sought to strike a balance between demands of Republican congressmen, the White House and his Middle America constituents in Grand Rapids. Although steadfastly supporting Nixon policies, he parted company on a few issues, probably to underscore his frequent assertion that he was no "rubber stamp" for the White House.

One of Ford's most controversial moves came in 1970, when he led an unsuccessful fight to impeach Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas because of his connections with a private foundation and because excerpts from a Douglas book appeared in a magazine Ford claimed was pornographic.

THE SAME YEAR he was first elected to Congress, Ford married Elizabeth Bloomer, a slim Grand Rapids fashion coordinator. They have four children.

At the Fords' two-story brick home which he built 19 years ago in suburban Alexandria, Va., Ford keeps in trim by swimming twice a day in his heated outdoor swimming pool. A Christmas skiing vacation at his place in Vail, Colo., is a family tradition.

His Fords attend Immanuel-on-the-Hill Episcopal Church, on the grounds of Vir-

House passes bill setting regulations for strip mining

From Hot Call Report

Following is a summary of key votes by members of the Illinois congressional delegation during the period July 25-28. Included in the summary are votes by Illinois' two senators, Republican Charles H. Percy and Democrat Adlai E. Stevenson III, and Northwest suburban congressmen U.S. Rep. Philip St. Crane, R-12th, and U.S. Rep. Samuel H. Young, R-10th.

House

STRIP MINING: A bill setting tough federal regulations on the operation of strip mines, passed 291-81.

The bill now goes to conference. In part, it requires that strip-mined land be restored to approximate natural contours, forbids strip mining of land too steep to be restored and authorizes federal funds to pay for land reclamation.

Supporters argued that government regulation will force strip-mine operators to protect the environment.

Opponents argued that strict regulation of strip mining will trigger higher coal costs and, thus, cause increased dependence on imported oil.

Harold Collier, R-6th, and Kenneth Gray, D-24th, voted no. John Kluczynski, D-5th; Dan Rostenkowski, D-8th, and Les-lio Arends, R-15th, did not vote.

MASS TRANSIT: Motion to return to committee the conference report on a bill to make federal operating subsidies available to debt-plagued urban mass transit systems, passed 221-181.

The bill would have made available $800 million during an 11-month period. The effect of voting to recommit the bill was to kill it.

Those voting to recommit argued that too much of the money would go to large cities like New York. They also argued that the subsidies would encourage transit companies to operate at a loss, in order to qualify for the money.

Those voting against argued that hard-pressed transit companies need immediate relief. They said that boosting mass transit ridership will ease energy shortages.

Hanrahan, Derwinski, McClory, Erlenborn, Arends, Anderson, O'Brien, Michel, Rallsback, Shipley and Gray voted yes.

Metcalfe, Murphy, Kluczynski, Collier, Collins, Rostenkowski, Yates, Annunzio, Madigan and Price voted no.

Findley did not vote.

NUCLEAR AGREEMENTS: An amendment to increase Congress' control over international nuclear agreements, such as those recently negotiated with Egypt and Israel, passed 194-101.

The amendment strengthened language in a bill dealing with the role of Congress in overseeing the sale of reactors or nuclear fuel to foreign powers. The original language permitted Congress to disapprove nuclear agreements. The amendment changed that to require approval in the form of an act of Congress.

The over-all bill later was passed and sent to conference.

In supporting the amendment, U.S. Rep. Bob Eckhardt, D-Tex., said "The only way to control the power to export nuclear potential . . . is simply to say that before it is done Congress must act affirmatively."

Opponents argued that the amendment infringes on the executive's constitutional powers and hinders the U.S. role in promoting peaceful uses of atomic power.

Metcalfe, Hanrahan, Collins, Yates, and Shipley voted yes.

Murphy, Derwinski, Kluczynski, Collier, Young, Annunzio, McClory, Erlenborn, Anderson, O'Brien, Michel, Findley, Madigan, Price and Gray voted no.

Rostenkowski, Arends and Rallsback did not vote.

Senate

CONSUMER AGENCY: A move to close debate and force a vote on the bill to establish the Agency for Consumer Advocacy, formerly called the Consumer Protection Agency, rejected 56 for and 42 against, with two-thirds majority, needed.

The agency would have broad powers to intercede on consumers' behalf with businesses and federal agencies.

In rejecting the cloture petition, the Senate voted to delay a vote on final passage. The cloture move fell 10 votes short of the two-thirds majority needed under Senate rules to close debate.

Senators voting to close debate argued that consumers need a strong voice in government.

Most of those voting against oppose the bill because they fear it would create an unnecessary bureaucracy bent on harassing businesses and government agencies.

A few senators voting against, however, said they support the agency, but were not yet prepared to close debate. One of them, U.S. Sen. Lawton Chiles, D-Fla., said, "I will vote for cloture when it becomes apparent . . . that a filibuster is in progress."

EMPLOYEE PROTECTION: An amendment guaranteeing federal assistance to juvenile correction workers whose jobs are affected by changes in federal juvenile delinquency programs, passed 66-24.

The amendment was attached to a bill calling for upgrading various federal programs for rehabilitating juvenile offenders. The bill was later passed and sent to the House.

Under the bill, some juvenile facilities and programs may be phased out. In part, the amendment called for retraining of displaced employees. In passing the amendment, the Senate voted to change language that would have made states responsible for enacting employee protection programs.

Supporters argued that displaced employees deserve federal guarantees.

Opponents argued against unnecessarily interjecting the federal government into correctional administration, an area of traditional state and local control.

Percy Yes
Stevenson Yes

CRIME DEVICE EXPORTS: An attempt to table an amendment that prevents the export of U.S.-manufactured police equipment to the Soviet Union and other totalitarian countries, rejected 73-21.

After rejecting the tabling motion, the Senate voted to attach the export ban on crime devices, a bill dealing with the Secretary of Commerce's export control authority. The over-all bill was later passed and sent to the House.

The ban follows recent disclosures that sophisticated U.S. crime equipment had been scheduled for display at a Soviet trade exhibition.

In supporting the tabling motion, which would have killed the export ban — U.S. Sen. Robert Packwood, R-Ore., cited difficulties in determining which nations are totalitarian, and said that some U.S. allies might be denied U.S. crime equipment under the ban's provisions.

In opposing the tabling motion, U.S. Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., argued that American technology should not assist "any nation that engages in repressive police practices."

Rep. Albert H. Quie, R-Minn., one of Ford's closest friends in the House, described him this way: "He is a great, open, decent individual with a tremendous amount of courage. He can pull together the forces in our economy who are worried over the danger we are in."

Another ally, Goodell, once said: "A Ford administration would be honest, open and believable. We could do worse — and have."

Said Rep. John Anderson of Illinois, third-ranking House GOP leader: "We will have a channel of communication between the White House and Congress that has never before existed."

DURING HIS confirmation hearings for vice president, House and Senate investigators dismissed as groundless an allegation by small-time lobbyist Robert Winter-Berger that he had loaned Ford $15,000 that was never repaid.

On orders from the Senate Rules Committee, the Internal Revenue Service audited Ford's tax returns for six years and found only one error. It disallowed an $871.44 deduction Ford had claimed as a business expense for clothing purchased for the 1972 GOP convention.

Ford paid the $435.77 in additional taxes without a penalty.

Attorney Jean McKee, his Democratic opponent for the House in 1972, said Ford's "image of believability" was so strong he would have to be caught smuggling heroin into the country to upset his trust among Grand Rapids voters.

"I think he's probably as clean as anyone can be," she said.

WILLIAM KOEHLNE, president of Oakton Community College, spends his free time on "paper work." In the past seven or eight years he has created about 19 paper sculptures in the basement of his home.

"What happens to triangles?"

"Horned Grabber"

Paper sculpture

Doodling or art?

by KATHERINE BOYCE

College presidents do a lot of paper work, but William Koehnline, president of Oakton Community College, does considerably more than most.

His paper work is of monumental proportions, sometimes exceeding his own height of 6 foot 3 inches. But for Koehnline, it really isn't work at all. It's pure enjoyment.

This college president takes out the frustrations of his day on paper and glue. Koehnline has created about 19 paper sculptures in the basement of his home over the past seven or eight years.

There are big ones, small ones, green ones, yellow ones and red ones. They're made from paper, cardboard, tape, glue, plastic foam and just plain junk. Even the casual observer has to admit they all have at least one thing in common — each is unique.

KOEHLNE calls his creations "three-dimensional doodling" and he firmly denies that they are works of art. "I think it grows out of the same impulse that makes people doodle on telephone pads," he says.

Koehnline works on paper sculptures whenever he has some free time, raw materials and the urge to create. A typical week may have "three week nights when there is not a committee meeting," he says. That's when he leaves his administrative duties for paste and paint. "It's very good therapy," he says.

Koehnline says he doesn't know where he got the idea to start making paper sculptures.

Today when he begins a sculpture he says he has no idea how it will turn out. "I don't know what's going to come along. I don't know until I'm very nearly finished whether I'm finished," he says. "If I never finish it, who cares? As a matter of fact, finishing it is not the objective."

NOW KOEHLNE is working on a sculpture from an 8-foot box that contained his new floor lamp. Some of his sculptures are dedicated to his daughter and two of them house the speakers for her stereo.

But Koehnline doesn't get any help from his family on his creations. "Everybody has been very good about keeping their hands off," he says. "It's not a joint project. It's very much a lonesome one-man thing."

One of the principal ingredients of the sculptures is mailing tubes. Koehnline gets other pieces of cardboard, packing material and boxes from friends. The only materials he purchases are glue and aerosol paint. The sculptures are usually done in colors so bright they are almost luminous.

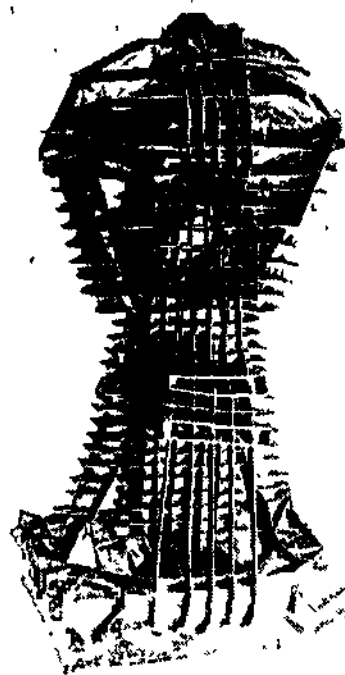

Koehnline doesn't consider himself an artist, has never sold one of his creations, and he's given only two sculptures away to friends or relatives.

"I don't mean to put myself in a category with real artists," says Koehnline. "It seems to me that if I were an artist, I would get psyched up for what I was doing. My life is such that I have to be up for other things."

Most people reserve the word "artist" for a honorific title, says Koehnline, but some people say art can be anything. "If being an artist is something special, then I'm not. If an artist is something everybody is then sure, I'm proud to be part of the human race," he says.

Atlanta fights to save a theater

by THOMAS G. BELDEN

The Fox Theater, a once-glistening monstrosity that is one of America's last palace-like movie houses, is scheduled to be demolished and the people of Atlanta don't like it one bit.

The Fox's marble water fountains, masonry latticework, carved chair legs and low archways are all from an era that seems destined for oblivion.

"The Fox is a showplace in the 'Roxy' style, theaters which were built in the '20s and were a phenomenon," says theater manager Mike Spirtos. "The other ones have all been torn down and there just won't be any left."

The owners of the theater announced a month ago that it was no longer "economically feasible" to operate the Fox and said they planned to sell the building to Southern Bell Telephone Co. as the site for a new high-rise headquarters.

Almost immediately, a "Save the Fox" movement was launched to find an alternative to the destruction of the huge, ornate theater that is supposedly a replica of the Al Hambra in Granada, Spain.

ORGANIZERS OF the movement have collected the signatures of 11,000 persons who say the 45-year-old palace should not be torn down, and all manner of public officials plus actress Helen Hayes have added their support.

Zeal for the movement is running high enough now that almost 2,000 persons turned out recently for a "Save the Fox" rally at the theater, and let out a hearty cheer for an Atlanta real estate man who said he would make an effort to buy the building and turn it into a music hall.

"We're not Santa Claus, we're businessmen," developer Harry Avron said. "We're prepared to buy the Fox Theater and we're going to pay what it takes."

Reportedly, Southern Bell is willing to pay $5.5 million for the choice piece of property just north of downtown Atlanta.

Before Avron, sounding like an evangelist, took the microphone, dozens of officials and citizens told the bolsterous crowd about efforts to save the building.

"The Fox is an endangered species," said Georgia Tech architecture professor Frank Beckum. "I think we all agree that they don't build them like this anymore. The Fox is extremely significant as an architectural masterpiece as well as a socio-cultural document."

The theater, built between 1926 and 1929, has a seating capacity of 4,000 and beneath its 135-foot wide stage are five floors of dressing rooms, cavernous storage areas, practice rooms and another auditorium and banquet room.

THE METROPOLITAN Opera used the Fox for many years, but as Atlanta grew numerous other auditoriums were built and many special productions, including those of the Met that had been using the theater went elsewhere.

Movies alone could have supported the Fox at one time, also, but in the last few years, feature films were no longer making money because of the theater's location in a changing neighborhood. (United Press Int'l)

Pennsylvania Dutch study offered by eastern college

"Ve grow too soon old und too late schmart," is one of the "cute" sayings printed on Pennsylvania Dutch gift items, such as trivets and towels, sold in many stores and restaurants.

This summer, the History Department of Ursinus College, Collegeville, Pa., offered a unique look at the Pennsylvania Dutch or German community, designed to dispel the stereotype of the hex sign-hanging, heavily accented country Dutchman.

The college credit program investigated the Pennsylvania German way of life and its influence on American culture, beginning with the German and Swiss emigrations in the late 17th century. The growth and transformation of the dialect also were discussed. Called "Deitsch," a regional pronunciation of "Deutsch," this dialect is still spoken in Pennsylvania and elsewhere with some changes, after 200 years.

Ursinus College is located in the heart of Pennsylvania Dutch country, and is ideally situated for such a study, with all the resources necessary at hand. Subject matters discussed included powwowing, a form of white magic which is a local type of "faith healing," a workshop on translating hymns and popular songs into Deitsch, gravestone art, dialect, traditional lore of beekeeping, funerals, herbs, the occult, and the use of the almanac in planting.

A WORKSHOP on religious motifs in the folk art of the area covered stove-plates, pottery, furniture, glassware and Fraktur, which is a combination of watercolor decoration and medieval calligraphy on documents such as birth certificates and bookplates. Discussions bring out many little known facts about the folk group. Participants learn, for example, that both the so-called Kentucky rifle and the Conestoga wagon were Pennsylvania German developments.

Two days were devoted to the study of the so-called Church Germans, the members of the Lutheran and Reformed Churches, and the Plain Folk, the Mennonites, Amish and Dunkers. Participants visited two historical Montgomery County churches, including their cemeteries, which contain outstanding examples of Pennsylvania Dutch gravestone art. Carved on low slabs of red sandstone, the geometric suns, flowers and hearts are part of the artistic tradition brought by the immigrants from Southern Germany and Switzerland.

IF THIS summer's seminars prove successful they will become an annual affair, according to Dr. William T. Parsons, director of the project. For information on this matter, he may be contacted at the History Department, Ursinus College, Collegeville, Pa. 19422. This summer's program has ended, but if you are of Pennsylvania Dutch extraction, or simply like to study these old ways, you may be interested in a future offering. (Information from Sabra Petersmann, Tri-State Trader, Knights-town, Ind.)

The Pennsylvania Dutch country is one of my favorite vacation places, but one thing not mentioned in the seminar advertising was food — surely just an oversight. But then, I am preoccupied with that subject! If you have questions, please write Grace Carolyn Dahlberg, in care of Paddock Publications, Box 280, Arlington Heights, Ill. 60006.

Joseph P. Kennedy subject of informative biography

"JOSEPH P. KENNEDY,"
BY DAVID E. KOSSOFF
Prentice Hall, $10

As a father Joseph Kennedy reached his pinnacle of glory when one son sat as President of the United States, another ran the attorney general's office and the third was elected Senator from Massachusetts.

He had suffered a crippling stroke, but then the Kennedy heritage seems an unrelenting seesaw of triumph and tragedy. The author does a thorough job, relying heavily on secondary sources, relating Kennedy's unique life, even going back to his ancestor's struggle through Ireland's Great Famine of 1848.

From his youth, Kennedy was propelled by a strong desire to earn money. He did it easily, in a variety of ways, including banking, movie-making and liquor imports.

But however crass his ambitions and questionable some of his business dealings, Kennedy did have the capacity to seek higher achievements. When he was pushed out of public life after an astonishingly inept performance as ambassador to the Court of St. James, he doggedly shifted his energies to his remarkable sons.

The book is best in the first half when handling material that is less familiar. Its chief difficulty lies in depending too heavily on magazine and newspaper articles, speeches and like sources. When Franklin D. Roosevelt died, the author writes, "One wonders how Kennedy reacted." You'll never know by reading this book. Nonetheless, this is an informative biography of "a very special man," as one newspaper described him in an obituary.

"FLYING,"
BY KATE MILLETT
Knopf, $8.95

People who write books can be assigned one of two arbitrarily named categories — authors and writers. Writers are word craftsmen; authors are point makers. For instance, in her first and widely hailed book, "Sexual Politics," Kate Millett was an author making a point about how various writers were handled in literature. She, as an author, was discussing people such as Norman Mailer, certainly best known for his mastery of words, not ideas.

Now we see the emergence of Millett as the writer of a long stream of consciousness autobiography on the year after the publication of "Sexual Politics." She is an author in need of a subject.

She complains about being used or manipulated by the media, but really no one is forced into being a talk show guest. It is for fun or profit and both are voluntary. If Millett was manipulated by anyone, it was her sisters in the radical, lesbian end of the feminist movement who may have forced her into making public the lesbian side of her nature.

But if that were true, no one has forced her into the intimate, sometimes interminable, detail of those lesbian relationships that she reveals in her book in prose that would have been better left unwritten.

Kate Millett is capable of clear, instructive and even insightful writing to a subject, but she should steer clear of the subjective.

"FOREST HILLS DIARY,"
BY MARIO CUOMO
Random House, $6.95

When New York City decided to build a low income housing project in Forest Hills in 1972, residents rebelled with a ferocity that astonished many. Individuals of liberal leanings angrily objected to the proposed influx of thousands of poorer citizens into their middle class, middle income neighborhood. It was a classic confrontation in a government's efforts to provide proper housing for the underprivileged, a conflict that today is being repeated across the nation. The author, the mayor's mediator in the crisis, gives a straightforward, day by day account that takes its drama from the importance of the issues involved.

"THE SILVER BEARS,"
BY PAUL E. ERDMAN
Scribner's, $6.95

A scheme to make millions of dollars through the manipulation of the silver market seems an unlikely subject for a thriller but the author succeeds in producing a funny, fast moving story out of these financial dealings. Just as he did in "The Billion Dollar Sure Thing," Erdman, a monetary expert, proves that international finance can be great fun and games.

"PATRIOTISM WITHOUT FLAGS," BY DANIEL LANG
Norton, $6.95

From the trial of Dr. Spock to the wanderings of a young AWOL Marine who objected to the Vietnam War, the author chronicles the manifestations of protest during the 1960s. Through reports on such individuals, he shows that patriotism goes deeper and is more complex than simply loving one's country. As he commented, "It is not enough to die for one's country, one must also want to live in it."

The Players of Schaumburg open with "Lil Abner" tonight at the Northwest Center for the Performing Arts, 704 E. Bonded Pkwy., Streamwood.

For the 8:30 performances tonight and Saturday and the 2:30 matinee on Sunday, tickets are $1.50 for students under 18 and $3 for adults. Special group rates are available. For reserved seats call 882-1173.

"Lil Abner" will also be staged Aug. 16-18 and 23-25.

Hal Holbrook to play Lincoln in TV specials

"Schaumburg's Lincoln," starring Hal Holbrook, will premiere this fall on the NBC television network when the American Bankers Association (ABA) co-sponsors six hour-long specials based on Carl Sandburg's biography of Abraham Lincoln.

Keyed to America's Bicentennial celebration, three of the specials will be presented by the ABA during the 1974-75 season, with the first to be broadcast on Friday, Sept. 6. The three other specials will be presented during the 1975-76 television season.

The much honored Holbrook, who won Broadway's Tony Award for his highly acclaimed impersonation of Mark Twain and an "Actor of the Year" Emmy Award for his starring role in "Pueblo," takes on the part of Lincoln in full make-up.

The television specials will concentrate on six different aspects of the "man" Abraham Lincoln.

"THERE WILL NOT be any debates or speeches," director-producer George Schaefer, himself a six-time Emmy winner, said. "We're just trying to take him out of that marble image and give him some flesh and blood."

Holbrook went to Lincoln's own country for his research, especially to southern Indiana's Gentryville, 16 miles from the Ohio River, where Lincoln lived from ages 8 to 21.

"I based my act on how people speak down there. They say 'thang' instead of 'thing,'" Sandburg said Lincoln didn't say "chair," he said "chay-er" or "cheer," Holbrook explained. The six-volume biography of Abraham Lincoln won Sandburg a Pulitzer Prize.

Playing opposite Holbrook as Mary Todd Lincoln is the renowned dramatic actress, Sada Thompson. Her performance as the four different ladies in "Twigs" brought her the Tony Award. Her performance in "The Effect of Gamma Rays on Man-in-the-Moon Marigolds" earned her the Obie Award for Best Performance.

Curtis Institute celebrates its 50th anniversary

The Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia, one of the nation's leading conservatories, will celebrate its 50th anniversary with a wide-ranging series of concerts throughout the 1974-75 school year.

The concerts will feature many distinguished artists, including celebrated alumni such as Rudolf Serkin, the Institute's artistic director, Gary Graffman, Mieczyslaw Horowitz, Eugene Istomin, Abbey Simon, and Leonard Rose.

Among the 50 concert events will be performances by the Curtis Orchestra under the direction of Eugene Ormandy, a major series of operas presented by the Curtis Opera Department, and a number of Master Courses.

Highlighted will be works by eminent composers who have studied at the Institute, such as Samuel Barber, Lukas Foss, Gian-Carlo Menotti, Ned Rorem, Lee Hoiby and Leonard Bernstein.

The school was founded in 1924 by the Curtis-Bok publishing family, owners of the Curtis Publishing Company and several Philadelphia newspapers. (UPI)

'Foolish Things' with style

Bryan Ferry, lead singer and pianist for the avant-rock British group Roxy Music, has set about to create an album of style for his first solo effort.

That album, "These Foolish Things" (Atlantic records), is filled with style, indeed many styles as Ferry reaches to the musical feel of the past three decades to offer up-dated versions of 13 well known pop tunes. Unlike an artist doing an album of his favorite songs (such as Jerry Garcia's "Garcia" or David Bowie's "Pin-Ups"), Ferry, I believe, has tried to make the songs he selected valid for a performer in today's world.

Ferry's interpretations, which rely much on his vocal inflections and word stresses, casts a tinge of irony on a classic such as Bob Dylan's "A Hard Rain's A-Gonna Fall" and brings forth the comic-seriousness that, while inherent, lay unnoticed in the Rolling Stones' "Sympathy For the Devil."

Both of these songs are very familiar to most pop listeners, but perhaps through their familiarity we have stopped to consider their meaning, their value as pieces of communication. By altering the familiar word stress, Ferry calls attention to the words and elicits a reconsideration of each lyric.

THE SHOW tune "These Foolish Things Remind Me of You," from which the album's title comes, in a way is a summation and belongs at the end where it is. The song is full of inherent style and tells of the meanings things have for each individual apart from any mass meaning.

Other than the three mentioned songs, highlights among the 13 tracks are a fine "The Tracks of My Tears" (by Smokey Robinson), Stevie Wonder's "Loving You

Bryan Ferry

Is Sweeter Than Ever," "Piece of My Heart" (a big hit for Janis Joplin) and the Beatles' "You Won't See Me." The latter song is much better than the too-sweet Anne Murray version that is currently popular.

This is a fine album, and although it might take a bit to get used to Ferry's style, the effort is worth it.

A BIT OF EFFORT also is required to appreciate the intricacies of two new albums by jazz pianist Keith Jarrett. The albums are "Treasure Island" (Impulse records) and "Solo Concerts" (ECM/Polydor records).

Jarrett, a 29-year-old who has played piano since age 3, requires the effort though. As he said last year, "I'm tired of people thinking that they've supposed to have something thrown in their laps. If they'd realize that everything that is put in their laps drops out when they stand up, they might change their minds. They've got to give up something in order to get something."

The pristine, unaccompanied Jarrett is

by Tom Von Malder

amply provided in the three-record "Solo Concerts" set. The music is two complete concerts — one at Bremen and one at Lausanne — in his 1973 European tour. (Jarrett has been more popular in Europe until late, despite his work with Miles Davis and Charles Lloyd.)

All this is not meant to scare one away from Jarrett. Even the non-jazz lover can easily fall into the alluring moods of the solo album. On "Treasure Island," Jarrett expands his music to pieces of the rock idiom with the addition of guitarist Sam Brown. Yet, it is saxophonist Dewey Redman and bassist Charlie Haden, who more often share the spotlight with Jarrett. Several of the albums cuts contain excitement, including the fine title track.

Jarrett is progressive jazz for everyman, everyman who is willing to work a little for his enjoyment, that is.

MUSICAL FUSION, that of rock and classical, is what the Dutch group Focus is about. Their new album, "Hamburger Concerto" (Atco records), should continue to build their popularity in America, a popularity based on the free-style yodeling of "Hocus Pocus."

"Birth" is the class cut from the first side. This Van Leer's flute and keyboards are particularly fine. The song is very lyrical and a bit less free-form.

All of the second side is given up to the six-part title concerto. Most of it I fell in love with immediately because the "Starter" movement contains that famous Beatles guitar riff from "Abbey Road" and the melody from the traditional song which Northwestern University uses as its "Alma Mater." I could never resist sentimentality and when it is performed so well, sigh.

For the rest, Focus continues to delight the aural sense. Their style is as entertaining as it is clever.

New records anticipated for Gold Coast Art Fair

The 17th annual Gold Coast Art Fair is expected to set new records when it opens at noon today on Chicago's Rush Street and adjacent streets between Chicago Avenue and Cedar.

Last year 590 exhibitors turned out and the spectator count reached 585,000. This year general chairman Joseph Zimmerman predicts there will be more than 600 exhibitors, which should set a new attendance record.

Exhibitors have been accepted from 16 states and Canada. Artists are coming from as far as Alaska, New York, Florida, Virginia and Connecticut. All Midwestern states will also be represented.

The fair runs from noon to 10 p.m. on Friday, Saturday and Sunday. It's sponsored by the Near North News and the Gold Coast Association, and admission is free.

Ald. Burton F. Natarus (42nd district), Zimmerman and Burton Browne, owner of the Gaslight Clubs and the Chateau Louise in East Dundee, will lead a parade up Rush Street from Chicago Avenue beginning at 8:30 tonight.

Proceeds from the air fair will be donated to the Chicago Heart Association and to local charitable organizations.

Woodfield Commons art fair Aug. 18

Rain or shine, the third annual Woodfield Commons arts and crafts fair will take place on schedule Sunday, Aug. 18.

According to Irene (Rae) Partridge, the show director, the shop center mall at Meacham and Golf Roads in Schaumburg has an overhand that will protect both visitors and exhibitors even should it shower that day.

Set-up time for the juried show is 9 a.m. with the public opening at 10. The show closes at 6 p.m.

There is still time to enter the exhibit, which is open to all fine artists and craftsmen. To enter they must submit slides of their exhibit work, a resume and a self-addressed stamped envelope for return of the slides along with a request for entry to Irene Partridge, Rt. 1, 146 Park Ave., FRVG, Barrington 60010.

MRS. Partridge is also accepting entries and providing information for the Northpoint arts and crafts festival Sept. 22. The shop center is on Rand Road at Arlington Heights and Palatine Roads, Arlington Heights. Entry requirements are the same as for the Woodfield Commons exhibit.

Applications to enter the Woodfield Commons fair may be obtained at Kral's Kiddie Korner in the Commons and for the Northpoint show, at John M. Smyth Co.

'Seesaw' lives up to expectations

by GENIE CAMPBELL

There were two questions I needed to have answered about "SEESAW," a touring musical that is stopping over at the Auditorium Theatre for 12 days.

Was it worth all its prior buildup? Is LUCIE ARNEZ herself a star... or just the daughter of one? (One can't judge solely on TV appearances with her famous mom)

Halfway through Lucie's first musical number, "Nobody Does It Like Me," my mind was made up.

Yes, the show is a bright entertaining treat, the kind Chicago should feel privileged to host, and Lucie Arnez as Bronx-reared Gittel is right on key with an over-abundance of gusto and talent to thoroughly captivate an audience. The musical is a hit and so is she. What better combination is there?

Yet not withstanding JOHN GAVIN, her co-star, puts in a rewarding performance as a somewhat staid, Midwestern lawyer, who though not quite free of his Omaha wife, becomes adorably enraptured by Gittel's eccentric, individualized nature, the kind that might be described as a bit of Liza Minnelli with a dash of Barbara Streisand. I say this because Miss Arnez is able to throw off that same kind of endless energy.

The modern day love story that ends somewhat tragically for Gittel, who must give up her man but realizes a greater sense of self-confidence from the whole experience, is gentle, genuinely funny, yet still down-to-earth enough to be able to touch just about everyone.

The show unfolds smoothly and includes several lavishly choreographed numbers that are exceedingly colorful and fun to watch.

A decided highlight of the production is six foot six TOMMY TUNE, whose lanky frame almost completely doubles over for many of his steps. It's no wonder he received the Tony Award for best supporting actor in the Broadway production of "Seesaw." He's great.

Make up your mind now to see the show because it's in town only through next weekend, Aug. 17.

Herald writer Barry Sigale caught GALEN's opening night show at ALL-GUERS' FIRESIDE in Northbrook. He writes:

"When Galen of the talented fingers begins to rev up a happy tune like 'The Entertainer' on his Yamaha piano, he breaks into a wide grin as if he is as happy to hear the song as are the people who have come to hear him play.

That's the way it is with the veteran pianist and slowman... a string of moods and reflections, a savoring of musical brilliance highlighted by a blazing end to several selections in which his hands become a blur in a masterful attack on his instrument. On his feet, he raises his arms as the band strikes their final chord.

For a $2 cover charge, folks out for an enjoyable evening can stop in to see Galen in the next four weeks at the elegant Allgauer's located near the Milwaukee Avenue and River Road intersection.

Backed by a four-man band (Kris Kolacek, bass; Rich Moore, guitar; Dale Heller, drums; and Pat Leonard, organ), Galen plays something for everyone. At his opening Tuesday night, he played a stirring medley of requests.

Galen wore a black graduation-like blouse with fringes on the sleeves and his piano was adorned with a light during his sculpture he designed himself. He doesn't have a female vocalist with him this time as he did during his first engagement at Allgauer's, but sang one number himself. His voice is best described as average and with his enormous talents on the keyboard he might do well to remain seated throughout his entire hour on stage."

BARBARA RUSH makes a return appearance at ARLINGTON PARK THEATRE in the bittersweet comedy "FATHER'S DAY," opening next Thursday for five weeks. It is a humorous, tragic look at three divorcees who decide to entertain their ex-husbands on Father's Day.

Miss Rush, who was impressed with "Father's Day" when she first saw it, opened in the play in San Diego and then produced and directed its course to the stage of the Huntington Hartford in Los Angeles where it has played since the beginning of July.

The production will return to Los Angeles for an additional five weeks following its run here.

DAVID LONN, managing director of Arlington Park Theatre, and the three stars of the current show, "Luv," JOYCE VAN PATTEN, BILL MCCUTCHEON and DOM DELUISE, celebrated Dom's birthday Aug. 1 over dinner at LE GOURMET.

Surprised patrons received an on-the-spot concert when Lonn took to the keyboard and DeLuise accompanied him on bass. How old is he? No matter how many times he was asked, TV's "Lola Luck" star never did confirm his age. "Luv" closes this weekend.

You won't have to go far to see the rock group CHICAGO perform, since they have announced they are presenting two concerts opening night (Sept. 6) of B'GINNINGS, a new 1,800 seat night club located in the Woodfield Commons Shopping Center in Schaumburg. Tickets go on sale through the club Aug. 19. Of course, it's going to cost you plenty to get in.

Individuality a reason for weaving

by TOM TIEDE
(Last in a series)

DAVIS, W. Va. — Once it was all done the hard way: A farmer raised sheep, the sheep grew wool, the wool was spun into yarn and the yarn woven into small pieces of cloth.

Now it is somewhat different: A derrick raises petroleum, the petroleum is manufactured into thread and the thread is transformed by computerized looms into miles and miles of synthetic sheets.

Progress, perhaps, but Mrs. Dorothy Thompson is one of a growing number of citizens today who prefer the past. When it comes to making material, she and thousands of others in the nation still weave by hand. Despite the time involved, the difficulty of getting proper machinery, and the tedium of the process in this age of automation, hand-spinning and hand-loom weaving have been thoroughly revived in recent years. Some women, as Mrs. Thompson, have even gone all the way back to raising their own resource — sheep.

MUCH OF THE activity occurring today is predictably amateurish. High clothing prices have forced some women to try a hand, even if it's an unsteady one. But there are also a fair number of weavers such as Mrs. Thompson who are genuine masters.

Thompson products are widely known in northeast West Virginia; she has a basement full of antiquated spinning wheels and looms — a dozen altogether — and has been a practicing artisan for more than 55 years.

She learned the craft as a schoolgirl in the Depression. Schools then taught skills along with facts and figures and Mrs. Thompson, as all the girls of the day, studied shop as well as spelling. Hand weaving was an obligatory class, and apparently an appreciated one.

"I remember we loved school," says Mrs. Thompson. "It seemed that back then we were really learning something."

AS IT TURNED OUT, of course, the Thompson weaving class was learning something destined for the economic scrapheap. The good times which followed the Depression made hand-weaving obsolete in much of the nation. Yet the good times did not come so quickly to Appalachia; thus Mrs. Thompson and others continued the craft as an important industry of the region.

SHE CAN TEACH the basics in five minutes, but weaver Dorothy Thompson admits you can never learn all about weaving. She acquired the skill during Depression days. Today the money is more in teaching.

And when hand-weaving finally did become more novel than necessity, it was preserved — to this day — for the sake of tradition and eye-catching tourists.

Such is the tourist demand, actually, that weaving classes are being started anew in West Virginia. Mrs. Thompson teaches one of them in the Canaan Valley section of the Monongahela National Forest. Thousands of tourists visit the area annually, "buying up everything that ain't nailed down," and residents naturally want to get part of the booty.

"I STILL WEAVE for myself," says Mrs. Thompson, "but the big money now is in teaching others."

Apparently, neither the teaching nor learning is particularly difficult. Sitting at one of her looms, explaining to a visitor, Mrs. Thompson says she can "teach the basics in five minutes."

She gives a brief show of straightening wool fiber, and puts in on a spinning wheel to demonstrate the creation of thread. Then, yanking about treadles and pedals and warping reels, she points out the intricacies of her loom, the confusing array of frankly perilous looking patterns, and begins to tromp on the machine and toss the yarn around.

"See, I told you. It's simple, nothing to it."

Despite the Thompson optimism the process looks more snarled than simple. And indeed, she admits: "You never can learn all there is." Moreover, the activity seems inordinately tiresome to the casual observer.

LIFT A BAR, tromp on the pedal, toss the thread through — repeat this process a thousand times and you have a few inches of cloth, repeat it a hundred thousand times and you have an unmade dress. Tromp, lift, toss. Tromp, lift, toss. Mohandas Gandhi started a nation this way — India — but in today's world the process is both clumsy and exceedingly prosaic.

And besides the monotony of the action, it is not an especially thrifty activity, nor in fact a superior one. Mrs. Thompson admits that hand-weaving can be more expensive than buying ready-made material, that handspun thread is not nearly as good or as uniform as that from the factory, and that unless the hand-weaver is greatly gifted, her product will simply not be as nicely woven as a piece of material picked up during a department store sale.

YET IF THERE are no particular advantages to handwoven cloth, there are a number of satisfactions. The design can be unique for one thing, like none other in the world; it can be made for a mood, for a season, or a personality and this alone would be enough for Dorothy Thompson.

She remembers the days when people were individuals, when they didn't dress and look alike, and so if nothing else came from her loom it would be enough to produce exclusivity. It's nice, she says, so stating both the definition of and reason for craftsmanship, "to have something of your own."

Joffrey Ballet premiere at Ravinia

A ballet premiere, two ballets new to Chicago and three new to Ravinia will be included in the City Center Joffrey Ballet's repertoire of 11 ballets to be danced in seven performances at the Ravinia Festival Aug. 20-25.

The Joffrey Ballet's premiere of "Evening Dialogues" by Jonathan Watts, danced to Schumann's "Davidsbündler-tanze, Opus 6," will be presented Thursday evening, Aug. 22, and repeated at the Saturday matinee. Stanley Babin will be solo pianist.

The Schumann music ties in with this season's focus on composers, Schubert, Schumann and Schoenberg.

As previously announced, the company will present Jerome Robbins' "New York Export, Op. Jazz" to music by Robert Prince, and Robert Joffrey's "Remembrances," set to Wagner's "Wesendonck Songs." Both productions are recent entries in the Joffrey's repertoire and have not been danced by the company in this area. The first performance of "New York Export, Op. Jazz" will be Tuesday evening, Aug. 20, and repeated Friday and Saturday evenings. "Remembrances" will be danced on Friday and Sunday evenings.

THE JOFFREY BALLET is also bringing Gerakl Arpino's "Viva Vivaldi!" danced to Antonio Vivaldi's "Concerto in D," which has been reintroduced into the repertoire and will be performed at Ravinia for the first time. When the company brought back Arpino's exciting modern ballet to the City Center last March it received a "bring-the-house-down reception," according to the New York Times. Until 1970, it was the young company's signature work, opening and closing its seasons.

Other ballets new to Ravinia, so far announced, are Twyla Tharp's "As Time Goes By," set to the Third and Fourth Movements of Franz Joseph Haydn's "Farewell Symphony," and Jose Limon's "The Moor's Pavane," to music by Henry Purcell, arranged by Simon Sadoff.

This season will be the Joffrey Ballet's third consecutive engagement at Ravinia.

Music On Stage offers 'Carousel' for benefits

Organizations looking for a fund-raising activity may want to sponsor a performance of "Carousel," being presented in September by Music On Stage.

MOS is making this offer to social and service clubs throughout the northwest suburbs, according to its president, Karol Vernon of Niles.

Six performances of the Rodgers and Hammerstein musical will be given Sept. 13-15 and Sept. 20-22 at Elk Grove High School, Arlington Heights Road and Elk Grove Boulevard.

Blocks of "Carousel" tickets for group sales and benefits are available now for any of the six dates, said Mrs. Vernon. Blocks are available at a discount depending upon the number purchased, and the entire house of 500 seats may be bought for $2 each. However benefit tickets must be priced at $3.50, the single admission rate, or higher, according to MOS rules, she said. "FOR VERY LITTLE effort, you can make money for your service projects while enjoying an evening at the theater," she commented.

Curtain times are 8:30 p.m. on Friday and Saturday and 2:30 p.m. Sunday. The Sunday matinees are especially good for children's groups and senior citizens, Mrs. Vernon said.

Further information may be obtained from Mrs. Vernon, 966-4720, or Harriet Sumner, 966-0026.

Groups wishing to plan a theater party or benefit later in the season will have a choice of two other Music On Stage productions. "Company" will be presented in an in-the-round cocktail theater setting at Wheeling-Northbrook Holiday Inn in January and February and "Anything Goes" is scheduled in April at Rolling Meadows High School.

Festival Theatre to stage 'Marat/Sade' in late August

Schaumburg Festival Theatre's summer production is Peter Weiss' "Marat/Sade," a story set in an 18th century insane asylum. It will be presented in the Schaumburg Township Library Aug. 23, 24, 30 and 31 and Sept. 1.

A play within a play, "Marat/Sade" recounts the assassination of the revolutionary Jean-Paul Marat with the Marquis DeSade as director and the audience involved as decadent aristocrats.

The marquis, played by Gary May, Schaumburg, uses inmates of the asylum to tell his story. Frank Getz, Palatine, plays Marat.

The inmates, who range from epileptics to paranoids, will be portrayed by Sandy Reimann, Esther Howard and Rita DeMarco, Schaumburg; Colette Dooley, Hoffman Estates; Bill Lindgren and John Buckley Jr., Palatine; Dan Carrigan, Streamwood; Guy Schumacher, Bartlett; and Iris Thompson, Roselle.

CHARLOTTE CORDAY will be played by Barbara Ashby, Schaumburg. Duperret is Rick Gast, Inverness. Wane Dixon, Hoffman Estates, is cast as Father Rous and Richard Grady, also Hoffman, is the herald. Bill Jackson will portray Coulmier and Joann Wolf, Simonne Evrard. Both are from Schaumburg.

Coulmier's wife will be played by Lorraine Swiatek, Schaumburg, and his daughter by Nancy Swiatek, Palatine. Bob O'Connor, Rolling Meadows; Linda Savulsky, Lombard; and Lori Clway, Roselle, are the overpowering nurses.

The four singing mimes are Ann Tillett, Bob Mardel and Dave Stanke, all of Schaumburg, and Dave Atkins, Roselle.

Joe McAvillie of Schaumburg, who recently directed "Send Me No Flowers" for Festival Theatre, is directing this production. Karen Flaxman, also a Schaumburg resident, is musical director.

Performances are at 8:30 p.m. except for Sept. 1 which is a 2 o'clock matinee. Tickets at $2.50 may be reserved by calling 882-1894.

Mr. and Mrs. Keith A. Lichner

Church bell chime 18 times for Nancy and Keith Lichner

The bells of St. John's United Church of Christ, Palatine, chimed 18 times on July 6 to signal the marriage of Nancy Helen Zels and Keith Allen Lichner. It was symbolic of the 18 months to the date the couple met at Alpine Valley ski resort in Wisconsin.

Nancy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Edward Zels, 2269 Westwood Ln., Plum Grove Estates, Palatine, went skiing there with friends and in the evening met Keith at a dance. That Jan. 6 produced two "firsts" for Nancy — her initial try at skiing and her introduction to Keith.

He is the son of the Steven Lichners of Elmwood Park and works for International Harvester in Melrose Park.

Nancy is in the nursing program at Harper College and works at Northwest Community Hospital.

THEY WERE MARRIED at 4 p.m. in double ring rites and then feled at a reception at Itasca Country Club.

Claudette J. Barclay of Wheeling was the maid of honor and Steve Schmidt, Elmwood Park, best man. Ushers were Steven Dayne Lichner and Andrew Paul Zels, the couple's brothers.

A '68 graduate of Fremd High School, Nancy then studied at Aurora College for three years. Her husband attended Triton College for two years.

A perfect honeymoon for the newlyweds would be to go skiing, and that's exactly what they've planned for December. Then it will be two weeks on the slopes in Colorado.

Rotate hanging baskets

Hanging baskets for indoor plants should be rotated periodically to allow for even plant growth all around, horticulturists say.

They met at Forest View

Karen Sue Pfaff and Michael Keen, both of Arlington Heights, began dating while juniors at Forest View High School, continued their romance through four years at Illinois State University and exchanged marriage vows and rings on July 13.

During their courtship they also worked at an area Jewel food store together.

Parents of the couple are the Irv G. Pfaffs and the Ron Keens.

Their wedding took place in Queen of the Rosary Church, Elk Grove Village, at four in the afternoon. A dinner reception followed at Casa Royale in Des Plaines for 240 guests.

KAREN MADE her own wedding gown of white satin, trimming it with an organza yoke which she hand-applied in lace. She also appliqued a lace motif on the train and made her headpiece to match her gown. Her veil was also hand-made.

White orchids, carnations and baby's breath were in her bouquet.

Vala Lower of Dwight, Ill., was Karen's maid of honor. She wore an apricot volle gown overlaid with a soft plaid and topped with a bolero jacket. She carried yellow and apricot tinted daisies with baby's breath and greens.

The three bridesmaids were attired in identical gowns, two in yellow and one in apricot, and their bouquets were the same as the maid of honor's.

TERI PFAFF, Karen's sister; Sheryl Keen, the groom's sister; and Kathy Loftis of Hillside were the bridesmaids. Six-year-old Jennifer Pfaff, the bride's younger sister, wore a yellow dress to match the others as she came down the aisle as flower girl. She carried tinted daisies in a basket.

All of Michael's attendants are from Arlington Heights. Dave Liesen was best man; Larry Keen and Greg and Robert Pfaff, the couple's brothers, and Brian Langowski were the groomsmen. Ring bearer was Douglas Pfaff, the bride's 7-year-old brother.

After a week's honeymoon in the Ozarks, the newlyweds have settled in Chicago. Karen teaches at Queen of All Saints School in Saganash, Ill., and Michael is with Deluxe of Chicago.

Read all cleanser directions carefully

Dear Dorothy: Noticed a reader mentioned using the cleanser containing oxalic acid on discolorations on dishes. Isn't oxalic acid poison and very dangerous? — C. R. Leandro

It is all that — and the cautions are printed on every container. I bought some oxalic acid once to use in an experiment and was uneasy until I got rid of the remaining material. It looks like granulated white sugar, and so is one of the most dangerous poisons around because of its similarity in appearance. This is a good time to again stress that no cleaning product should ever be used without careful reading of every word of instruction (or caution).

Dear Dorothy: Visiting relatives, I was fascinated how my cousin made sandwiches for a picnic. She used the round, unleavened bread (think it's Syrian) which has a hollow center. She made a slit in one part and slipped in the meat. Not only was the sandwich delicious but there was no worry about the filling slipping out. It's super with children. — Ella Krannett

Dear Dorothy: The Ivy was beautiful but, when the tendrils started going through the air conditioners, we had to pull it all down. But how do we get the remnants of the vines off? — Ellen Hartor

You need a solid ladder, a strong arm and a wire brush or brick to rub off the bits and pieces.

Dear Dorothy: Surely there must be a simple way to clean up chrome. And we do have a lot of chrome appliances! — Caroline Michaud

Girls catching up with boys in crime

by GEORGETTE WAGNER

Girls in their teens cheat, shoplift, use drugs and sell marijuana just about as often as teen-aged boys. They also fight, rob, carry guns and knives and use them.

This is one finding of a three-year study on juvenile delinquency by the Institute of Juvenile Research, Chicago. More than 3,000 Illinois teen-agers were interviewed.

"Shoplifting has increased among teen-aged girls. Strong arming has increased. Fist fights, carrying a weapon. Gang fights," said Patricia Miller, survey director.

"No one has ever found the amount we found which leads us to believe there has been a dramatic jump."

Increased female juvenile delinquency is not confined to Illinois. The FBI Uniform Crime Report shows serious crime committed by girls under 18 has increased 306.1 per cent since 1960. The increase for teen-age boys was 81.8 per cent.

POLICE BLOTTERS say the same thing more graphically. Recently a 16-year-old Illinois girl knocked her teacher down a flight of stairs. A teen-aged girl, enraged at a schoolmate, stabbed her. Two girls last winter strangled another girl with a wire cord.

But this increase in juvenile delinquency has not occurred among male adolescents, according to Dr. William Simon, the institute's director of sociology and anthropology program.

"The population grew. So there are more people out there doing things. But if you compare statistics over a 20-year period, those for boys haven't changed," he said.

The Illinois study was not concerned especially with female adolescents, but tentative findings appear to shatter some timeworn stereotypes.

"There is no basis to the image of a female delinquent . . . as someone very committed to a role that is self-destructive. She feels no less adequate. Her self-esteem is no lower," Miss Miller said.

YOUTHFUL OFFENDERS are just as likely to come from affluent or hard-pressed families and from suburbs and farms as from cities.

"There is virtually no pattern in socioeconomic status," Miss Miller said.

"Anyone who thinks he can buy immunity from his type of residence is kidding himself," Simon said. "Also family variables have little effect. In a curious way, it is a lot more accidental than that."

The study found one striking difference between male and female adolescents involved in more violent acts such as fist fights, using a weapon and robbery. Teen-aged boys fought more often than they robbed or used a weapon. The number of girls using their fists equalled the number who committed a robbery or used a weapon.

"A fist fight is a much more serious act for a woman than for a man," Miss Miller said.

Young women were found to cheat, shoplift and commit other offenses considered less serious about as frequently as boys. While more female adolescents committed more serious acts than in the past, they did so much less often than teen-aged boys.

But the real question is why the dramatic increase? Miss Miller, citing the "changing status of women," said it was still too soon for researchers to reach any definite conclusions from the institute's data.

Permissiveness on television: Part 4

Networks must march to public beat

by DICK KLEINER
Last of a Series

HOLLYWOOD — Television is a business. It is a profit-making enterprise, selling entertainment.

It is not, nor does it want to be, a vehicle for social change. And that's why today's permissiveness is in some ways an embarrassment. TV executives insist that the medium has no intention of leading a broad social revolution.

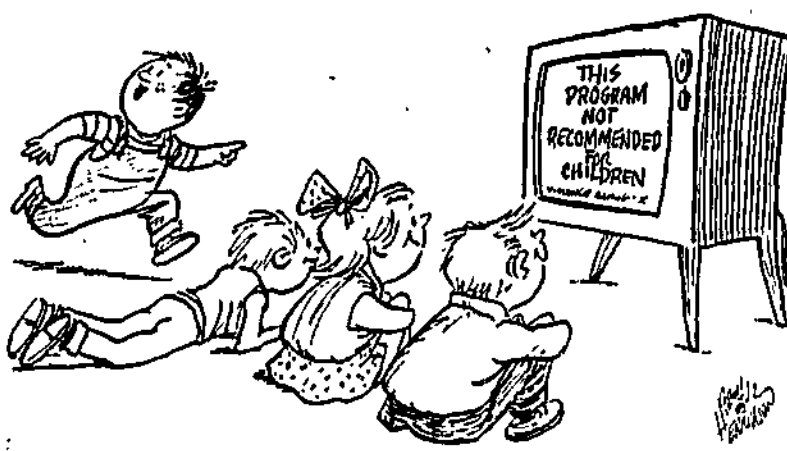

"TV can't lead," says one network executive. "We merely reflect the moral attitudes of the country."

WHAT MAKES TV what it is is a combination of many factors; the success of certain feature movies, the best-selling book of the moment, successful magazines and records or plays. And, perhaps most important, the state of the world. TV networks respond to all these pressures and formulate their programming accordingly.

But the aim always is to appeal to the largest possible segment of the American viewing public. If their taste in movies and books indicate a desire to see cop shows, they get cop shows. If there is a youth revolution on, there will be a TV show or two reflecting that movement.

"We have to listen to the public," says the TV executive. "Somebody must interpret the public moods and that's us."

THE BIG PROBLEM is, of course, that the public mood keeps changing and there is never any unanimity out there.

What pleases one segment of the public will appall another. TV tries to keep everybody happy but it is an impossible task.

"Different segments march to different drummers," CBS president Robert D. Wood said in a speech in Nashville, Tenn., "and each one believes everyone else is out of step."

Trying to keep all these different marchers content is TV's difficult task. If "Maude" does a show about abortion, some people find it admirable, others reprehensible. The networks must try to find a middle ground and please the most.

"It's a tremendous responsibility," says producer Norman Lear. "In the wrong hands, it could be very bad."

LEAR BELIEVES the answer lies in the word "entertainment." He takes pride in the fact that nobody has ever objected to any of his shows — "All in the Family," "Maude," "Sanford and Son" — on the grounds that they were not entertaining.

"The things that other people say we get away with," Lear says, "such as some of the themes and ideas we have used, are themes and ideas that must be first and foremost entertaining. We work on them well over a year, in most cases, and approach them with great sensitivity."

He cites a recent "All in the Family" which dealt with Edith discovering she has a lump in her breast. On the surface, that would seem a difficult and perhaps offensive subject for a comedy show.

"But it has great comedy value," Lear says. "Edith has a secret. Archie can't know. That's the whole idea of comedy. It might seem to be a dramatic show, but usually good dramatic ideas have a good comedic underbelly."

MOST NETWORK executives believe that the public has accepted today's permissiveness and, in fact, applauds the honesty with which TV tackles current topics of social import.

"Our mail today," says Tom Kersy, head of ABC's West Coast Dept., of Broadcast Standards and Practices, "shows that the public is enjoying a new believability about TV. It's no longer a pap. We're being as honest as we can possibly be."

But this honesty offends some. That cannot be helped. There will always be somebody offended by everything. All that TV is trying to do is make a little money and to do that it must entertain as many people as it can. If they want (or will accept) permissiveness, that's what they'll get.

Boy Scouts silent on Mormon racism

The Mormon Church is triumphantly preparing to accept ticket requests for guided tours through their massive new $18 million temple near Washington, D.C.

This latest in a series of national denominational shrines is a towering and impressive edifice, strategically located on the well-traveled Capital Beltway. It gives the motorist the impression that he has been rerouted to Camelot.

But a crisis has erupted in Utah that could turn this temple's dedication in November into a giant protest rally — as well as wrecking a good segment of the Boy Scouts of America.

FOR IT HAS been discovered that all black Boy Scouts are being systematically denied the right to become senior patrol leaders in all troops sponsored by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Headquarters of the LDS in Salt Lake City has issued a statement which confirms this policy, that only deacons quo-

Religion today

by Rev. Lester Kinsolving

rum presidents can be senior patrol leaders.

Since the Mormon priesthood has been denied to all blacks of African descent (at least all but one, named Elijah Abel, a black mortician in Nauvoo, Ill. 1810-1884), black Boy Scouts have no chance to become senior patrol leaders.

AT NATIONAL Boy Scouts of America headquarters in North Brunswick, N.J., an all-day meeting produced from Chief Scout Executive Alden (The Iron Duke) Barber the following statement:

"We recognize that this is a very sensitive issue. Until we have had further discussions with the general authorities of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, we feel it would be imprudent to comment at this time."

But on the very same day as this statement, the LDS headquarters explained: "The Boy Scouts of America knows our church's policy and has approved that policy."

Furthermore, noted the LDS very cleverly: "Lord Baden Powell (founder of the Boy Scouts) said that 'Scouting should be religion-related.'"

THE BSA HIGH command only recently was involved in another horrendous scandal called "Boyspower '76," in which membership figures were falsified in cities across the nation. Richard Fisher, BSA director of public relations, when asked about this massive dishonesty in membership figures, conceded "That's on the record."

Fisher also conceded that Boy Scout local councils across the country receive federal funding. But when asked about reports that the BSA's $115,000,000 budget has an $8.5 million deficit, Fisher replied:

"I can't substantiate that," — and he declined to comment further.

Will the federal government — as well as religious denominations who sponsor Boy Scout troops — tolerate the BSA headquarters' acquiescence to racial discrimination?

OR MINDFUL of how strongly Jesus felt about those who harm children (St. Matthew 18:6), will the other denominations take appropriate action and disassociate themselves from the BSA (with its "God and Country" programs) unless BSA orders an end to the confusing of Mormon sponsorship with Mormon control of Scouting?

That this would be difficult is obvious in the LDS statement's reminder that there are "227,000 Mormon boy scouts — 80 per cent participation of all Mormon boys in Scouting, as compared to 30 per cent of all non-Mormon boys."

At the same time, BSA is chartered as the Boy Scouts of America (not the Boy Scouts of Utah). And the scandal of any 12-year-old boy being systematically denied the right to any Scouting post simply because of the skin pigment he was born with is a cruelty which is un-Christian, unJewish and unAmerican.

Moral issues snag ecumenical drive

The ecumenical movement, finding a great deal more consensus among churches on doctrinal matters than ever expected, may founder on some very practical matters: moral and ethical issues such as abortion, euthanasia and divorce.

Theologians from such long-time doctrinally antagonistic churches as the Roman Catholic and Lutheran have surprised themselves and their respective communions by the degree of unity they have been able to discover in their views of one-time touch doctrinal issues.

In the Lutheran-Catholic dialogue, for example, theologians have found they agree on such issues as the primacy of the papacy, baptism and the eucharist.

But according to the Rev. Arthur F. Gouthro, director of Graymoor Ecumenical Institute, "moral and ethical questions don't appear to be receiving the ecumenical attention they require and deserve, and as a result the entire ecumenical enterprise is called into question."

"MORAL AND ETHICAL issues," he said, "have enormous potential for polarization and divisiveness on local, national and international levels and this potential may even overshadow that of more strictly doctrinal concerns."

Graymoor Institute recently held an ecumenical conference on implications of divorce for the ecumenical movement.

"Make no mistake about it," Gouthro said, "Unless there is serious and consistent attempts at accord and understanding on these issues . . . ecumenical progress may be seriously impaired,

World of religion

by David E. Anderson and ecumenism may well be a matter of academics for those who have time for it."

Perhaps even more important for the Atonement friar was the fact that "without joint Christian witness in the area of morals, consensus on matters of doctrine will have little effect on the lives of Christian people."

THE STRAIN such issues can cause was dramatically demonstrated last year when Bishop James Rausch, general secretary of National Conference of Catholic Bishops, temporarily withdrew from the Interreligious Committee of General Secretaries.

Rausch quit the committee, made up of the executive heads of the National Council of Churches, the Synagogue Council of America and the NCCB, after an NCC official filed a statement with the House Ways and Means Committee strongly opposing aid to private and parochial schools.

The Catholic bishop has since returned to the committee and the group has strengthened its lines of communications on issuing sensitive statements that affect each of the bodies.

Abortion, too, has been one of those issues that have created strains between church bodies.

Rausch, for example, has voiced the fear that some people see the anti-abortion, "right to life" movement as wholly controlled by the Catholic hierarchy and that such a view may resurrect some of the more virulent forms of anti-Catholicism.

ABORTION RIGHTS advocates, on the other hand, see the strong Catholic backing for an anti-abortion Constitutional amendment as an attempt, in United Methodist Bishop James Armstrong's words, "to write the views of a particular religious community into the laws of the land."

Robert V. Moss, president of the 2 million member United Church of Christ, testifying before Congress against the abortion amendment proposals, said they would "nullify our beliefs and would make it illegal for our members to practice them."

Gouthro emphasized the impact such differences have by recalling a letter he had received from the Catholic bishop of a medium-sized parish with a progressive reputation in ecumenical affairs.

Catholics plan picnic at Park Ridge Sunday

An old-fashioned picnic is planned Sunday at noon at All Saints Grove, Higgins Road and Des Plaines River, Park Ridge, by the All Saints Cathedral of the Polish National Catholic Church.

Mass will be celebrated before the picnic at 11 a.m. in the chapel, 9201 W. Higgins Rd., next to the picnic area.

"Tragedy Near a Small Town"
Dave Barker and Frank Brown, two young boys, decide to play a trick on their father, Dave Barker, and his wife, Mary. They take them into a haunted house at the edge of town to frighten them. But the trick backfires and Dave Barker is seriously injured. She is confined to a hospital for weeks.
Our story revolves around the spirit and wickedness of Dave Barker, who not only refuses to let Dave Barker see his daughter, but insists a damage suit against the boy's parents. The places of Mrs. Barker and of Dave Barker fail to please the spiritual Mr. Barker.
Frank Barker becomes involved when Mr. Barker cannot understand the equally self-righteous Pastor. Mrs. Barker finally and bravely at her own risk, she still don't know whether or not Mr. Barker will relent, the episode is open ended.

On stage with the late Sen. Ralph Smith in tow, President Nixon is applauded by Congressmen Philip Crane and Robert McClory, among others.

Crowds warm to Nixon on suburban visits

Local politicians joined the festivities. Here, Nixon meets two former mayors, Dan Congreve and John Woods.

The cheering for Richard M. Nixon in the Northwest suburbs began even before he came here, but on the day he stepped onto the stage at Prospect High School as a candidate for the Presidency, the cheering was a roar.

Nixon loved it and chose to return to the gym at Prospect High — and the throngs of suburban Republicans who helped to elect him — during the off-year election race for U.S. Senator from Illinois.

Nixon made another trip to the area, this time to Schaumburg Airport, in 1970 when he arrived in the middle of three helicopters to inspect a sewerage treatment plant in Hanover Park.

On all three occasions among us, Nixon was greeted by the crowds usually accorded a national figure, and a President. He came here on the ascendancy of his approach to the Presidency. He shook hands, he waved to well-wishers and then he was gone, toward his destiny.

With Sen. Everett Dirksen of Illinois.

Highland tips Arlington in state tourney

by MIKE KLEIN

ROCKFORD — Out beyond the left field fence here at Blackhawk Park, just beyond the one-way drive and down a steep embankment, the Rock River ambles its way toward the Mississippi.

Not half an hour before American Legion state baseball finals started yesterday, they were pulling a young man out of that river. He was very much dead, stripped to the waist, clothed only in blue jeans.

All of which made Arlington Heights' 4-2 first round loss to defending state champion Highland seem not so bad, after all.

Who was he? How old? Who could know at that early time? But certainly the unfortunate young man couldn't have been much older than the American Legion baseball players who battled just a few hundred yards away.

Their game was a hard-fought and close contest that found Arlington Heights leading, 2-0, through five innings behind the pitching of surprise starter Tim Halas.

Arlington coach Lloyd Meyer had indicated he would probably start right-hander Dar Townsend or southpaw Paul Kastner, the winner in Monday's Cook County championship game against Belwood.

"Kastner wasn't really ready," Meyer said afterward. "If I used him today, then again on Sunday, that's three times this week with just two days rest. I don't believe in doing that with kids this age."

"Besides, Halas has pitched two outstanding ballgames for us recently and he threw another one today. One run in seven innings; you can't knock that. He's pitched that way the last two or three times out."

The defeat knocked Arlington into Thursday's 8 p.m. game against yesterday afternoon's Bloomington-Magnolia loser. A second defeat in this double elimination tourney would end their season. (For late game results, dial 394-1700.)

Halas survived into the seventh, yielding just six hits. He had early problems as Highland stranded two runners each of the first three innings.

But the muscular righthander set Highland down without a hit in the fourth and fifth. He looked stronger. Arlington had nursed a 2-0 lead since the first when it scored off Dan Kolshor despite not getting a ball past the infield.

Halas had one out in the sixth when his problems began. John Friedrich lined a shot to left field. It seemed to be an ordinary single but Friedrich reached third when the ball bounced over Joe Riplinger's head. He scored on an infield out.

Halas created his own seventh inning problems by walking ninth place hitter Rod Zobrist a second time. Then when Steve Brendel bunted, Halas tried for the force at second but everyone was safe. Two men on, none out.

Jeff Hebrank's right field single loaded the bags. Bruce Hanson's powerful throw kept Zobrist at third.

Meyer changed pitchers, going to Dave Thorstensen. It looked bad when Bill Birch lined a shot toward center. But shortstop Jerry DeSimone ranged far left, stabbed the drive and tossed to Rick Sidor for a double play at second.

The luck was short-lived, though, as Mike Brown knocked a triple to the right field fence, scoring both runners for Highland's first lead, 3-2.

Carl Pedersen replaced Thorstensen to start the eighth. But after eight balls and one strike, he was on the bench, Kastner taking over. Kastner got Kolshor on a sacrifice before wild pitching Larry Madden home with the game's last run.

Arlington had Kolshor ready for hanging in the sixth and seventh innings but couldn't score, stranding five runners. A base running incident in the sixth found two men on third.

Back-to-back singles by Hanson and Sidor preceded Steve Breitbol's fly ball to right field. It was a routine play until Brendel dropped the baseball.

That sent everyone running and Meyer waved Hanson around third. Sidor kept coming and Breitbol was down to second. But Hanson fell down rounding the last bag and got caught in a rundown. He finally got back to third untagged.

Sidor was ruled out because Hanson had prior possession. Halas grounded unassisted to first, ending the rally.

"I think Hanson would've been out at the plate anyway," Meyer conceded. "But we're gambling because Halas comes up next and isn't a real good hitter. Maybe he'd have been safe; who knows?"

DeSimone's single and Riplinger's double after one out had Kolshor primed for an exit again in the seventh. Tom Good was intentionally passed and that left Meyer with a decision.

But Meyer stuck with Brett Frase, who had three strikeouts, as his hitter. Frase fanned a fourth time when he bunted foul. Hanson ended the inning with a fly to right center.

Meyer didn't regret letting Frase bat. "He's the type of hitter who can look bad two or three times, then come up and slap a hit. He's lost some confidence through this past week."

That was it for Arlington. Kolshor, a big righty who had 10 strikeouts, fanned Sidor, Dar Townsend and Ranco Aguirre in the eighth. He faced just four batters in the ninth.

He strung together eight shutout innings after Arlington's two runs on a hit in the first. George Vukovich walked before DeSimone bounced an infield hit. They scored on an infield error and fielder's choice. Riplinger and Hanson were given RBIs.

"We just didn't put the ball through the holes," Meyer said of his club which stranded 11 runners. "We must've hit five shots right at their outfielders and all of them with none or one man out." Meyer had special praise for Friedrich, Highland's left fielder. "Riplinger hit two shots out there and Vukovich tagged one that might have gone over his head. Those could have been tough plays."

Excellent defense by DeSimone and Sidor helped keep Arlington alive during the middle innings. Sidor robbed Randy Manley of a hit in the sixth when his infield out scored Friedrich. DeSimone ranged far left at short to get Zobrist in the second.

Memories

Retirement nears and Tommy Kouzmanoff looks back

by MIKE KLEIN

The scene was glorious, old Oakmont Country Club at one of golf's most prestigious events, the U. S. Open, back in the early Sixties. Tommy Kouzmanoff doesn't remember the exact year.

Arnold Palmer, young, tan and strong, was The Man. His Army strung along the fairways, awaiting their master's charge. Surely, Arnie would thrill them. Didn't he always?

But Arnie struggled well into the back nine at Oakmont. He's bogeyed his last two holes. Arnie's Army was docile, his charge feeble at best.

Kouzmanoff, veteran pro golf observer for Chicago's American, watched it unfold as he strolled these fairways with Winifred Palmer, Arnie's wife.

"She was alarmed and shook up like any young wife," he recalled. "She said, 'Tommy, what can I do to help Arnie?'"

"I told her no one would chase her off, to go out there in the middle and join him," Kouzmanoff said of that day in Pennsylvania. "Take hold of his hand, squeeze it and tell him you love him, that he can snap out of it."

So out walked a nervous Mrs. Arnold Palmer onto Oakmont, ready to tell her man it was time for The Charge. "Believe it or not, he birdied two of the next three holes to take the 18-hole lead," Kouzmanoff said. "I was the only golf writer in the whole country to know this incident because I set it up."

"My lead in the next day's paper was, 'How much influence can a golfer's wife have on her husband's game? Plenty, if she's Mrs. Arnold Palmer.'"

It was a coup! And just one of many disjointed incidents sprinkled throughout Kouzmanoff's more than three decades of sports writing. He's spent the last 31 years at Chicago Today, formerly the American and before that, the Herald-American.

They were good years, all of them. He's traveled the globe, covering professional golf, seen the greatest courses... Carnoustie and Glenageary in Scotland, Royal Kananapali in Hawaii, Royal Golf Club in Dublin and the King's Inn courses in the Grand Bahamas.

But you ask Kouzmanoff about his proudest moments and they all revolve around kids. Chicago kids, in particular. Kids who showed up for decades, different names, different faces, in his strong prep sports pages.

"I always wrote prep sports through the eyes of a father," he said. "Would I want my son accused of blowing a tackle? A high school kid never blows a tackle; he misses it. He makes the legitimate effort; he dives."

"I don't like the word publicity. That's comparable to advertising," Kouzmanoff said. "You pay for it. Recognition... that's what you want for kids."

It's nearly a bygone era for Kouzmanoff who celebrates his 65th birthday today. At month's end, he'll retire from Chicago Today.

He can't stop talking about kids, especially the inner-city youth he's watched on football fields and basketball courts for so many years. "They need the most help. They play football in taped oxfords. Their parents are broke," he said.

"They come from split families and have a hard time living decently, let alone starting in football or basketball. The big problem with inner-city kids is to get a good parental background so they get good grades. Many cannot pass a college entrance exam."

But the inner-city has changed over these many years. It was Polish and German and the kids were white in Kouzmanoff's heyday. Now, Chicago's inner-city is black. And Larry Casey, the man who'll replace Kouzmanoff as Today's prep editor, is also black.

"If he knows the inner-city, knows the kids' problems better than I do," said Kouzmanoff who's made Arlington Heights his longtime home. "Fifty-eight per cent of Chicago's public school enrollment is black. Larry knows problems that I don't. He talks their language."

Tommy Kouzmanoff was born in 1909 when Teddy Roosevelt was turning Presidential reins over to William Howard Taft and Ty Cobb had a .377 batting average to lead the American League. There had never been a World War. Like every other kid in Bensenville and America, he adored New York's greatest Yankee — George Herman Ruth.

"I saw Babe Ruth play when I was a boy," Tommy said. "Then my next view of him was in the Polo Grounds during an All-Star game when he was already afflicted with throat cancer. I could have creid. They gave him a tremendous standing ovation."

"Babe Ruth's photo was in my bedroom for years because I aspired to be a bit league pitcher. Yes, he was every kid's hero. If there had been player cards, you know how many you'd need to get a Babe Ruth? All the cards you've got and you still wouldn't get it!" Kouzmanoff exclaimed.

"Hank Aaron has done a lot. But Babe Ruth's name and fame will never die. He did all this despite being sort of a playboy."

Kouzmanoff pitched well enough that he twice earned tryouts with the St. Louis Cardinals famous Gas House Gang. But a pro baseball career wasn't in his cards.

So he turned to many odd jobs, finally advancing to buyer status in a wholesale jewelry house. For two years, Kouzmanoff attended business college.

Since his kid days, Tommy had been getting his sports writing fingers wet, working some 14 years for weeklies including the old Paddock Herald owned by Stuart Paddock, Sr.

It was late 1942 when Kouzmanoff chucked jewelry for a sports writing position in Springfield, Ohio. On Aug. 1, 1943, he got a chance to come home, joining Chicago's American.

Five years earlier, he'd begun sports officiating as a hobby. The pay was lousy, sometimes as low as $1, but that didn't seem to matter. For 28 years, he chased athletes across football stadiums and basketball courts.

Kouzmanoff officiated basketball at all possible levels — high school, college and pro, including the National Basketball League and current NBA. Oddly, he never whistled a technical. "It's no trick to call a technical," he said. "It's a trick not to call it." He hung up the stripes for good in 1966.

The sideline hobby never interfered with his sports writing work. Kouzmanoff always took the hardest officiating assignments. "They meant the most to me as a writer. I couldn't possibly be closer to an important game than being in the middle of the floor."

"I couldn't afford a mistake," he said. "I'd hear hecklers say, 'Kouzmanoff, as an official, you're even a lousy writer.' That made me feel good because that guy knows what I'm doing for a living. And I know he's reading."

He's been twice inducted into the Illinois Basketball Coaches Association Hall-of-Fame with separate honors for writing and officiating.

Kouzmanoff gets a bigger chuckle out of his membership in The Old Grand-Dad Club. The only placard names above his are Winston Churchill and Richard J. Daley.

The thrills... there have been so many. Covering Hebron during its 1952 rise to the Illinois prep basketball title. A school with 99 kids took on an entire state. "One of the greatest high school teams I ever saw," Kouzmanoff says.

Talk about great prep basketball games and Kouzmanoff can't forget the 1948 meeting between Arlington and Elgin. It was a regional game played at Woodstock.

Bill Robinson was Arlington's tallest man at 5-foot-10. Lloyd Meyer, Tom Stockdale and Orv Schaefer were each 5-8 and Gordon Busse topped out at 5-7.

Elgin had 6-8 center Bob Peterson who later played at Illinois plus a toptouch guard in Ron Weisner, eventual captain at the University of Wisconsin.

"No contest" was the billing on this game. But Elgin won by just a single point, 46-47. "They should have lost by 20," said Kouzmanoff who officiated. "But that's one thing about a high school game, a kid doesn't know enough to get discouraged."

"He hasn't learned the frustrations of life. He's like a young bird. He'll do something in a reckless moment where 20 years later, he'd stop to think first. When you stop to think, it's too late."

As Tommy Kouzmanoff celebrates his 65th birthday, he can look back on many outstanding memories. There were big moments in pro sports. But he drew greater joy from his All-Star baseball games and golf classics for city and suburban youth.

His most recent pioneering effort was last summer's Co-Ed Junior Golf Classic, the first time in history that girls and boys competed on an equal basis in age flights.

What's next? "Play golf and play the organ," he says with a look forward. "I'm the Denny McLean of the sports writers. But don't confuse us; he went sour."

Bob Frisk

Sports Editor

Maturity and the sports hero

Everybody has heroes, but it's becoming increasingly evident that many people we expect to look up to these days can only be seen when looking down. That's so very sad.

It's true as the nation painfully plods through this mess in Washington, and it's also true in the world of sports where heroes still trouble us.

If one guy isn't selling his soul and shoulder pads for an extra buck, another guy is throwing a fit for special treatment from his manager.

Then there are our National Football League heroes who have been begging for freedom — and money, too, of course. All right, guys. Come and get it. You're free to toil 9-to-5 and, yes, the factories are hiring. Nothing is worse than human bondage so why not try your hands at pumping gas or selling door-to-door?

It's a dismal commentary of the times that there are so few athletes who could actually stand as heroes and models in our society.

The children today have very few athletic models who are not only good athletes, but also mature people. The ability to gain maturity while being a winner is relatively rare.

Dr. Thomas Tutko, a professor of psychology who has been studying athletes in all major sports for the last 12 years, says the tremendous drive to win results in a loss of perspective and a need to alibi faults, to seek publicity to paint a picture that one wishes were so, and a self-centered attitude.

"Bill Russell (former professional basketball star) is one of the few athletes who was both a winner and a mature man," said Tutko. "He is a man who saw what he was doing, and had the wit and honesty to say, 'It's pretty silly, a grown man wearing shorts and chasing a basketball for a living.' He maintained a sense of humor and spontaneity, was outspoken in his honesty, and also made himself available to the community. He was an approachable hero."

Dr. Tutko feels that Hank Aaron of the Atlanta Braves may be the best model in history for the perfect sports hero.

"From the beginning, he had total dedication," Dr. Tutko pointed out. "He never alibied, never was 'uncoachable' — that is, he had dignity and was a member of the team, without being subservient."

"He suffered a certain anonymity for most of his career, but he kept plugging. And then fame came to him. Fame and money."

"But a most important thing about Aaron," he continued, "was the joy that he exhibited in his work. Not like a Mark Spitz. This is a sad story, as far as I'm concerned. When Spitz jumped out of the water in Munich, that was it. He doesn't swim anymore. He said very clearly, 'I'm finished with this.' Is that the mark of a true sportsman? It seems to me his life was over. So we see that it was all a chore for him, this swimming."

"I don't think Spitz was allowed to mature, to follow naturally his pursuit of excellence. All he pursued were medals."

"In a way, it seems Willie Mays may be the same. Willie loved his game. But on the opposite extreme from Spitz, Willie never prepared for anything after playing baseball. His life might be over, too. I mean, he will always be tied to his past.

Bill Russell

"I admire a Jim Bunning, who while playing baseball and giving all he had, was preparing for the future in business. And I admire athletes who give to their communities, who work with kids in their cities."

"I admire a Jim Palmer," Dr. Tutko continued, "who didn't deal with cliches and falsehoods after his Baltimore Orioles lost to Oakland in the American League playoffs. Palmer said, 'That's the best we could play. The A's deserve to be champions.' That's healthy. That's what sports should be all about: you work as hard as you can. You compete to the best of your abilities. And that's all, win or lose."

Dr. Tutko admires the contributions of Billie Jean King to women's sports, and the fact that she has shattered so many myths, but he admits it's a problem when looking for coaches who might stand as heroes.

"Most mature coaches are rarely heard from," he said. "Most are caught up in this insanity to win, and they become immature. The closest we come to mature behavior is in a Tom Landry or a Don Shula or a Paul Brown. They don't do a lot of ranting and raving, but they are into this thing of winning at all costs. Like George Allen, constantly urging his team to work harder to win. Since there are only 24 hours in a day, you work 24 hours. That's crazy behavior, to my mind."

Dr. Tutko feels that the most mature coach was Vince Lombardi.

"In some ways I think he was misunderstood," the psychologist said. "He did have an ethic about winning, but he had another quality, one that is rare among coaches."

"You know, Lombardi was the first one to mention on national television that the reason for the success of his Packers could be summed up in one word, 'love'."

Kouzmanoff remembers The Babe — at the beginning and at the end.

Arlington divers win star meet

The Arlington Heights Park District diving team finished their 1974 summer season undefeated by winning the Northern Illinois Conference All-Star Diving Meet at Olympic Park Pool.

Competing in the meet were 45 divers from 14 park districts who qualified for the meet by finishing in the top three in their own conference meets last week.

Arlington's 80-52 win over second place Northbrook put the AHPD Swimming-Diving All-Stars on the scoreboard with a 28 point lead as the swimming All-Star meet began on Wednesday.

Gaining team points for Arlington were Kelly Holland, 1st; Mike Duro, 2nd; Julie Krewer 3rd; Devin Giles, Joanne Krewer and Jeff Munk, 5th and Glenn Seaman, 6th. Following the meet, the team presented coach Wayne Oras with a gift in appreciation of his leadership through the victorious season.

The team has competed in several AAU meets this summer and will be diving the next two weekends in meets at Rockford and Palos. After a short break, the divers will resume workouts for the winter season. Anyone interested in joining the team should contact coach Oras at Olympic Park Pool, 253-0621.

Monroe has been pitching for the Sox' Sarasota team in the rookie Gulf Coast League since he signed as Chicago's new first draft pick in June.

The parent team announced earlier this week that the 18-year-old right-hander will move up to the Class A Appleton (Wis.) club in the Midwest League following his appearance in the exhibition at Cooperstown which will accompany the Hall of Fame induction ceremonies for Mickey Mantle, Whitey Ford, and several others.

Pardee's Blazers show Redskins' tendencies in conquest of Fire

by MIKE KLEIN

SOLDIER FIELD — Counterfeit Redskins! That's all you've got, Jack Pardee. And what was that about the gorgeous Georges — Allen and Hatas?

That Florida Blazers football club which pummeled the Chicago Fire, 46-21, here Wednesday night left Jim Spavital's ex-NFL veterans and most everyone else muttering, "They look just like the Washington Redskins."

How so? Consistent, methodical offense. Strong defense. And super specialty teams. These are the Washington Redskins of George "There is no tomorrow" Allen.

And they were the Blazers of Pardee, who played and coached for Allen at Los Angeles and Washington, Florida used punt and pass interception touchdowns plus a blocked punt to embarrass the Fire before 31,183 fans who beat the paths for a quick exit when the game got out-of-hand. Chicago actually left, 21-16, at halftime.

"It goes back further than George Allen," Pardee said of coaching tactics which gave the Blazers, 4-1, a one game lead over New York in the World Football League Eastern Division.

"I learned everything from him. He got it from Hatas. I'm sure you've seen some of these defenses before. They originated here in Chicago." It was a matter of second and third efforts.

Twice, the Fire defensive wall held out Florida near the goal line. Tommy Reamon was stopped for no gain at Chicago's oneyard line on Florida's initial possession, set up by the first of Mark Kellar's two fumbles. Kellar rushed 17 yards, his top pro game.

Florida opened the second half with a 62 yard march in 15 plays to the Chicago one. Fire linebacker J. D. Armstrong forced and then recovered Jim Strong's fumble.

But a pattern had been set as Florida went on to manhandle Chicago, 30-0, after halftime. It was a more important drive, said Chicago's Spavital, than the specialty team plays which eventually put out the Fire.

"The second half, we just came out and fell dead. The drive they had to begin the third quarter gave them the momentum they needed. Those other things helped, but that did it," Spavital said.

"I just didn't do a good job of getting our kids mentally ready. We were a half-step behind in everything we did."

Florida's three biggest plays were these:

—Rod Foster turning Chuck Ramsey's punt 86 yards for the game's first score at 10:41 in the opening period;

—Len Bryant blocking Ramsey's third-quarter punt and running it across to give Florida a 23-21 lead at 10:47; and finally —Billy Hobbs snaring a Virg Carter pass on Chicago's next possession and going 30 yards to give the Blazers a 32-21 lead less than two minutes later.

"It started with Rod Foster's punt return," Pardee agreed. "That was a gigantic play. Then the blocked punt (Bryant) seemed to take the fire out of the Fire."

Florida finished the killing with fourth quarter touchdown runs of six and 64 yards by Richard James, a replacement back.

Chicago scored all its points during the second quarter to overcome an 8-0 deficit and lead at the break. The other three periods were futility.

Kellar, WFL leading scorer with 64 points, ran three yards for his ninth touchdown in five games. Carter passed 54 yards to Jack Dolbin, burning Billie Hayes, and one yard to James Scott for the other scores. He's thrown 11 TD passes.

Carter admitted that Florida looked just like Washington teams he has played against. "I think that's exactly right and we knew it coming in," he said. "Obviously, we understand it better now. They're a good team that's going to be tough defensively."

Florida forced Chicago into seven turnovers, four pass interceptions and three fumbles. The Fire had just eight turnovers, four fumbles and four pass thefts, coming into this game.

"It was hard for our guys to get wide which is how Washington plays and, you know, Pardee was a big man there," said Cyril Pinder, Fire running back who removed himself from the line-up during the second quarter.

"We should've run right at 'em. They've got such good pursuit, same as the Washington teams, that you can't get wide."

Pinder, three carries for eight yards, didn't play at all during the second half when Bobby Wyatt gained 17 yards in four attempts. It was the flu, or some other troublesome bug, that put Pinder on the bench this time.

"I didn't have anything. I shouldn't have even been out there," Pinder said. "I belonged home in bed. But you try to give whatever you've got. Yeah, the leg's alright." He's been hampered by a hamstring pull.

Chicago dropped into second place of the WFL Central Division, Birmingham is unbeaten and scored twice during the fourth period to stop Detroit, 28-22, at home.

THE FIRE LOG: Chicago plays the rematch on Wednesday, Sept. 25, in Orlando. The 31,183 announced attendance brings the three-game Soldier Field total to 96,651. Philadelphia brings a two-game win streak here next week.

BANG-BANG PLAY. Bellwood first baseman Jim Berge stretches for the throw from infielder Jim DeAno as Arlington Heights' Bruce Hanson lunges for the bag in American Legion action Monday in the Cook County tourney finals. Hanson had rolled a grounder to DeAno's right and the speedy Hanson almost beat it out. But he was retired as Bellwood pitcher Tom Doyle looks on with interest. Arlington went on to a 3-2 victory.

 Mark Ackerman and Kevin Weller homered for Boomers' Tap, but two sixth inning runs on singles by Bruce Kaechele, Charlie Blodgett and Tom Curtin enabled Union Camp to come out as victors by a score of 8-4. Union Camp took an early lead on a two run homer by Gilt Davellette in the first inning.

Jerry Jozwiak scored five times and had four hits as Romano's Restaurant defeated Three Fountains, 20-8. Harry Mueller and Jim Hill also had four hits each for Romano's, and one of Hill's hits was a grand slam home run. Neil Cangelosi also homered for Romano's.

In the week's only other "AA" game, Kruse's Standard scored 10 runs in the final two innings and defeated Doris Tree Top Inn, 15-6. Jeff Kalb had four hits for Kruse's and Rick Wolfgang had a three run home run. Tom St. Germain homered for Doris Tree Top Inn.

"B" League
 King's Gallen scored three runs to take an early lead over Marathon, but Marathon scored nine runs in the second and third innings and went on to win, 14-9. Chris Sherwood homered for Marathon.

Central Telephone scored 20 runs on 18 hits in overwhelming Joe's Superette, 20-6. Centel had scored 11 of their runs after the first two innings.

Zac's Brigade scored 10 runs in the first two innings but were shut out the rest of the game and DePiero's Pizza fought their way back to win, 11-10. Al Shank homered for DePiero's, and Phil Vaccaro homered for Zac's.

Des Plaines VFW took a close game from Bulls, 5-7. Tom Bunzl, third baseman for VFW, turned a line drive into a triple play when Bulls had the bases loaded in the fourth inning. The play saved the game for VFW.

Palatine Cubs finish at 23-3

The Palatine Cubs, competing for the first time in the Woodfield Babe Ruth league, exceeded all the expectations they held at the beginning of the year to post a 23-3 record and win the league title.

Led by lefty Tim Prokof, who was 7-0 and had a no-hitter, the Cubs' pitching staff allowed only 31 earned runs in 180 innings for a team ERA of 1.55.

Kevin McKenna, a 6'5" righthander, once pitched an 8-0 shutout and fanned 18 of 21 batters.

Glenn Daniels, playing second base, hit .405 while shortstop Mike Ledna hit .538. They paced a team that hit .357 and stole 101 bases in 197 attempts.

OPEN SUNDAY

CHICK EVANS, the ageless benefactor of golf and golf scholars, gives some advice to Scott Walker of Elk Grove at the Chick Evans Teenage Golf Tournament being held at the Mount Prospect Country Club.

Ridley's 71 sets pace in Evans golf tourney

by CHARLIE DICKINSON

A trio of area golfers held the top three spots of the 17-19 flight of the Chick Evans Teenage Golf Tournament at the end of first round play Wednesday.

Playing on the Mount Prospect Country Club course Craig Ridley's even par 71 was good for the first round lead in the 54 hole tournament.

Hoffman Estates' Dave Love trailed Ridley by two strokes after carding a 73 and Rick Kevser, like Ridley a Mount Prospect resident, fired a 74 for third place.

Yet another area player, Del Jones from Schaumburg, was tied with three other golfers at 73 for fourth place.

In the 15-16 flight that completed competition in its 36 hole event Wednesday, Rockford's Chris Betz held onto his first round lead to take the championship with a 74-74-141. Bob Sembrat, from Evanston, took second with a 75-76-151.

Two area golfers were involved in a sudden death playoff for third place. Paul Mounts, from Prospect, and Rick Sargent from Buffalo Grove, lost to John Boudrent in the battle at 153.

Like the earlier flights, the 17-19 bracket had a large number of area golfers. Twenty-two of the 53 competitors, in fact, Palatine's Jim Hixley fired a 76 to stay in contention with the leaders. A 77 by Arlington Heights' Bruce Conroy left him half a dozen strokes from the leader.

Other area scores were Prospect's Ray Hafner with an 83, Greg Kay, another Prospect player, shot an 80. Kevin Halverson, of Arlington Heights, had a 78. Another Arlington player, Luther Abernethy, skied to a 96.

A pair of Prospect players, Rick Reed and Tom Hermanson, shot a 77 and an 81 respectively. Prospect's Dave Black had an 80, while Dave Nelson of Prospect carded a 78.

Kevin Eakins, of Hoffman Estates, fired an 80. Elk Grove's Scott Walker had an 87. A pair of Prospect players, Chris Contes and Vic Incinelli, scored 90 and 79 respectively.

Two Des Plaines players shot out of the running, Scott Kisten with a 95 and Phil Rociofson with an 86. Prospect's Brian McEneely finished up the area scoring with an 84.

The final 18 holes of the tournament will be contested today.

Brown's Glass puts strike in focus

'I'm confused' says pro gridder

NEW YORK — Chip Glass, the Cleveland Browns' tight end, has put the football strike in better focus than anybody else.

"I'm confused," he said. That shouldn't really throw him. So is everybody else.

The NFL strike now is in its sixth week. A lot of people who never knew what the issues actually were to begin with no longer care whether they ever find out or not. They're bored to death by the whole thing, turned off completely, and if this deadlock continues to drag out, the same thing will happen to pro football that happened during the baseball strike. Some fans will be lost forever.

Chip Glass was the first one on the picket line when the Browns opened their training camp at Ilwaco, Ohio, three weeks ago. He felt the call, and was firmly convinced of the players' cause.

Two weeks later, he wasn't so firmly convinced anymore. He began having some doubts. He laid down his picket sign, crossed over the line and came into camp.

This past Sunday, against the Los Angeles Rams, Glass changed his mind again, walked out of the Browns' camp and went home. The press asked him why he was doing it.

"I'm confused," he said. "I wanna speak to Art Modell."

Art Modell owns the Cleveland Browns, is a conscientious member of the NFL Management Council and has done so many good things for people, his own ballplayers included, that everyone you run into has at least one favorite story to tell about his characteristic unselfishness.

Two years ago, he bought himself some acreage in Strongsville, Ohio, 12 miles from downtown Cleveland with the idea of having a new stadium built there. In no time, several of Cleveland's business leaders got wind of the project and pleaded with Modell not to go through with it.

"If the Browns divorce themselves from downtown Cleveland, then we don't have a whole lot left," they told him.

Modell canceled all his plans and signed a new 25-year lease for his team to stay put.

"Cleveland has been good to me. I owe it something," he said.

Example:

Sometime ago, the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra found itself in need of finances. Modell, originator of pro football's perennially successful preseason doubleheader, came up with a way he thought he could help. He threw out one of those two games of the doubleheader and in its place let the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra play instead.

Along with it, he also booked Tony Bennett, Sarah Vaughan and Doc Severinsen. Then because Art Modell doesn't like to overlook a thing, he brought in the finest possible acoustical sound system.

As the musicians were crossing Cleveland Municipal Stadium to approach the stage a violent thunderstorm hit. Not a note over was played nor a note sung. Art Modell paid off everybody though, and after a two-hour delay to break down the stage, the Browns met the Minnesota Vikings. There wasn't a single complaint from anyone.

Example: Two months ago, Chip Glass, who comes from Tampa, Fla., went to Modell and told him he had an offer from the rival WFL.

"I've got a chance to play near my home, with the Jacksonville Sharks," said Glass. "What should I do?"

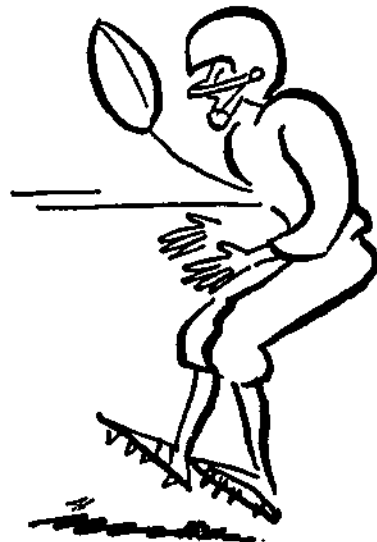

"Chip, you're not going to beat Milt Morin out of a job," Modell leveled with him. "I'll do anything I can to help you."

Glass, a six-year man with Cleveland and one of the highest paid backup ends in the NFL, is playing out his option with the Browns this year before moving over to the WFL. He wants to be with his fellow players, yet Art Modell never has been anything less than 100 per cent fair with him.

Last Monday, one day after walking out of the Browns' camp, he walked back in again for the second time.

No wonder Chip Glass is confused about this strike. He is not alone.

Sanders records one-hitter in 6-0 win

Tom Sanders pitched a one-hitter to pace the Arlington Heights 10 year-old All-Star team to a 6-0 victory over Prospect Heights in the Buffalo Grove Little League tournament.

Sanders struck out four and walked three, while being backed with some solid defense by his teammates. Brad Rosley got two hits to pace the Arlington offense, with Tom Reichel slugging a double and Pete Walsh and Sanders each collecting a triple.

Don't re-grip

Praise for golf coverage

I really appreciated seeing those clips (on the Western Open) and from Marshall Dunn and Joe Hill on down to yours truly, your coverage of our tournament at Butler was terrific! From start — how to get there to pro-am to starting times — to finish, you did a fine job of writing and reporting, and we appreciate, believe me.

Thanks again, Paul.

Fans forum.
I can't believe that ABC thinks they can replace Don Meredith with a buffoon like Fred Williamson. Meredith was colorful, but with tact and a certain air about him which commanded attention and respect. Williamson hits you over the head and says "give me respect" even though he doesn't deserve it. Maybe that's why they call him the Hammer. I am sure that after a few weeks, Williamson will discover that he won't be able to work in the same booth with Howard Cosell.

WORLD BASEBALL AHEAD?

Dear Editor:
Recent stories have persisted that next year the new World Baseball League will draw several top stars away from the majors in a recent performance of the World Football League and the World Hockey League. The rumors say that many top stars have already signed contracts with franchises in such exotic places as Honolulu, Tokyo, and Anchorage.

I've never really seen anything official on this but my opinion is that this is one league that will never get off the ground. Football and hockey are the kind of sports that will sell no matter who plays them, as long as there is some excitement. On the other hand, baseball is a dull game by nature and the only reason fans keep coming out is because of tradition. All the tradition is in major league baseball.

The only way the WBL could make a go of it would be if they could somehow get all the major league players into their league and the new league assumed the status of the majors. No one will go to see Cesar Cedeno, for instance, bat

WILL A'S START HURTING?

To whom it may concern:

As a Sox fan, I have to admit that it looks like a wait-until-next-year proposition. What's truly frustrating is the youth and strength of the Oakland A's. They've got everything they need to seemingly string five or six straight World Series titles together. And it's the misfortune of the Sox to be in the same division. If they were in the east, they might have a chance in a short series; but they're not.

The one thing that bugs me is the way the A's stay so healthy. Sure, once in a while they'll have an injury, but never multiple injuries over a period of several months ala the Sox in 1973. Maybe I'm a poor sport but I wouldn't consider a Sox division championship tainted in the least if they'd back into the title because of such circumstances. I mean, this happened to the Sox. They got off to a tremendous start and then the injuries — starting with the season-long disabling of Dick Allen — started and never stopped.

Injuries are the breaks of the game. In Oakland's case, the A's are long overdue. So let the breaks start coming.

LOOK. NO ASTERISKS.

Asterisks are a sure sign that the model you want is going to cost more than you thought.

Volvo has come up with an ingenious device to replace asterisks: standards. They allow every Volvo 164 to come fully equipped, at no extra cost, with extras like:

Air conditioning
Automatic transmission
Power steering
Infinitely-adjustable front bucket seats that let you sit on leather Fuel injection
Four-wheel power disc brakes
Whitewall radial tires
Ten-outlet heating and ventilation system

Rear window defroster/defogger
Tinted glass all around
Four 3-point retractable seat belts
Child-proof rear door locks
12-month warranty with unlimited mileage

Of course, with all these standards, you may wonder if the Volvo 164 comes with any factory-installed options. Yes. Volvo left one opening for options. A sunroof.

Even grandmasters have trouble analyzing moves

No less a genius than the great 19th Century French mathematician Henri Poincaré complained that he could not play chess effectively. He explained that because of a lack of control of his thinking processes, he could not analyze systematically. While he was considering a second and third possibility in a given position, he would forget or muddle the work he had done on the first. It is easy, even retrospectively, to sympathize with Mr. Poincaré, but perhaps he gave up too easily. Even the best chess players must exert a tremendous effort to effect the systematic inquiry and accuracy that apparently guides them through the most difficult battles. Thus Bobby Fischer shocked and disappointed his fans when he failed to exploit an elementary theme in the following position from (Diagram 1) the eighth game of his 1961 match with Samuel Reshevsky.

In this position, Fischer, as white, played 1. B-K4? and missed a simple but elegant idea, which would have forced resignation. He ought to have played 1. R-B7 check, forcing the trade of rooks. After the simplest continuation, 1. R-B7 check: R-B2; 2. R-K4, check, K-K4; he would have been able to play 3. B-N5! and reach our second position. Black's knight would be pinned to the edge of the board.

(Diagram 2) by the white bishop. Fischer's two pawns to one advantage on the kingside would then have won easily.

Not only is the winning procedure transparent to an experienced player, but Fischer had explicitly considered it, during adjournment analysis. Yet some quirk of mind, not unfamiliar to Poincaré a century earlier had misled Bobby to miss the already analyzed win.

Such elementary mishaps are the exception in grandmaster play. What makes the oversight so odd in Fischer's case was the fact that he had easily won with the same idea against Addison in the U.S. Championship four years earlier.

Our third diagram shows that position. It was Fischer to move and (Diagram 3) he rightly played 1. B-K5! This time the black knight is stalemated. If Addison had now played his Knight away from the rim of the board, i.e. 1... N-B3, Fischer would have answered 2. BxN, and the resulting king and pawn endgame would have been a win for white. Black, hampered by a double king bishop pawn, is effectively a pawn behind.

Addison limply continued with 1... K-R4 and after 2. K-Q3, P-N5; 3. P-N4, P-QR3; 4. P-QR4, PxP; 5. PxP, K-R5; 6. P-N5, P-xP; 7. P-R3, K-R6; 8. P-B6!, our last position was reached. The bishop and knight have (Diagram 4) not moved. King and pawns have contended against king and pawns, and white's "extra" pawn has shown itself to be decisive. Black resigned here. If he had played 7... PxP, the white queen rook pawn would have walked home.

One is left with the intriguing question: What happened to Fischer in 1961 against Reshevsky?

Win at bridge

Student spoils 'Be Kind Week'

"How was I to know?" asked the student. "The club play was a pure guess, wasn't it?"

"Not at all," replied the professor. "You have really embarrassed me right in the middle of the Jacobys' be-kind-to-declarers week."

West had led three rounds of diamonds. The third lead was ruffed in dummy. East could not overruff, so the student had played ace and one trump. West took his king and led a third trump. Dummy won. A low club was led and the jack finessed.

Dummy's ace and king of hearts were cashed to allow one club discard and the time of decision had arrived. If East held the unguarded king of clubs a low club was the right play. If West held the 10 and East king-small the queen play would bump the 10.

The student took some time, led a small club and was one down. Actually, he had made a hopeless play. West had shown up with three spades, two hearts, six diamonds and one club. Only one card was unaccounted for. East could not hold the unguarded king and the queen was the right play.

Nixon resigns as 37th President; Ford to take oath today at noon

A President steps down . . .

WITH AN AIR of determined optimism, President Nixon said his farewell to the nation Thursday night. Today at noon, he will become a former President of the United States and return to his home in California.

by BOB LAHEY

Richard Milhous Nixon, 37th President of the United States, abdicated his office last night with this final message to the nation:

"May God's grace be with you in all the days ahead."

In a message anticipated since the final devastating evidence of his participation in the Watergate coverup was made public Monday, the President said he would depart his office at noon today, at which time Vice President Gerald Ford will become the 38th President.

NIXON, repeating a familiar phrase that he has "never been a quitter," declared that leaving office is "abhorrent to every instinct in my body." But, he said, he was compelled to put the interests of America first.

He made only veiled references to his misconduct in the aftermath of the Watergate burglary, which led to his becoming the first President ever to abandon his office.

At one point he said he regretted deeply "any injuries" he might have caused the nation. But, he said, "If some of my decisions were wrong—and some were wrong,"—they were made in the belief that they were in the best interests of the nation.

DISPLAYING none of physical signs of stress that have been attributed to him in recent appearances, the President spoke in steady and measured tones, although there was an unmistakable timbre of emotion in his televised comments.

This was evident when he spoke of more than a quarter century of public service and added with obvious reference to the events that led to his departure from office: "Sometimes I have succeeded; sometimes I have failed."

In what was widely described as a conciliatory speech to the nation, Mr. Nixon acknowledged the "great sadness" that his decision to resign caused him. But he expressed confidence in Ford and asked the "understanding, patience, and cooperation of all Americans" for the new President.

NIXON GAVE as the chief reason for his resignation the erosion of support for him in the Congress. That support dis-

Ford silent at first; says he's ready

WASHINGTON (UPI)—A solemn Vice President Gerald R. Ford emerged from a momentous hour-long meeting with President Nixon in the Oval Office Thursday where a White House aide said he was formally informed of the President's intention to resign.

Alone and solemn-faced, Ford strode across the street to seclusion in his own office in the Executive Office Building without speaking to reporters clustered in a light rain on the lawn.

Minutes later, House Democratic Leader Thomas P. O'Neill said Ford will be sworn in as the 38th U.S. President Friday afternoon.

Sec. of State Henry A. Kissinger called on Ford in his office at the Executive Office Building shortly before 2 p.m.

CDT. A spokesman said the meeting was arranged at the Vice President's request. FORD HAD BEEN summoned to the White House after completing a medal of honor awards ceremony in nearby Blair House. Reporters swarmed around him as he left there, but he only shook his head at their shouted questions.

Earlier, he had canceled plans for a flying trip to the West Coast and other areas.

Ford had maintained for two days the self-imposed silence he pledged Monday on all questions relating to Nixon, impeachment or resignation.

But in an interview published Thursday in the New York Times, he was asked if he was prepared for the job if it should come about.

"No question about it," Ford was quoted as replying. "I think I have worked real hard . . . I've been to every department, met with the secretary and top staff of every department of government, at their place, not at mine . . . I don't know what more I could have done."

FORD WILL BE the first U.S. President not chosen by popular election. He was selected by Nixon Oct. 12, 1973, to replace Spiro T. Agnew, who resigned after pleading no contest to a charge of tax evasion.

Ford was sworn in as Vice President Dec. 6, and has spent much of his time since then traveling around the nation in an effort to unify and rally the scandal-shattered Republican party.

The Vice President's normally talkative staff either was hard to reach or unable to respond to questions. But the night before, press aide Paul Millich denied that the staff had been told to prepare for the Presidency.

Ford was reported to have been told by White House Chief of Staff Alexander Haig Wednesday that he should prepare himself for a transition of power. One of the first tasks facing him would be to select his own Vice President — to complete the first non-elected administration over.

Legionnaires react to resignation

'We grew up believing the President's right'

by DOUG RAY

There were many up to the very end who didn't believe President Nixon would really quit.

And when he told the country over national television, the bartender said in a low, almost choking voice, "dammit."

At the Arlington Heights American Legion Hall Thursday night, dozens played Bingo while the President told the world he would step aside. At the same time, Legionnaires talked about the man to whom they had given their vote to carry their flag and their thoughts. To them, the fall of Richard M. Nixon was something very chilling.

Minutes before the announcement, Joe Hurley, one of the post officers, wasn't sure the President really would go through with it. "Maybe he'll just step aside for awhile . . . he's a strong man, but when you see these things come out, I just don't know." He shook his head and talked about the man in whom he had placed his trust.

"It's pretty hard to accept this. We grew up with the idea the country is always right and the President, too," said Hurley.

"I'll tell you one thing, Nixon's a good man to have in your corner—at least when it comes to foreign affairs. If Ford comes in, I just hope he'll be a good one. I guess only time will tell."

Then there was H. C. Kibbie, 75, a man who has seen many a president come and go and every year he loses a bit more respect for them all; in fact, all politicians. "Sure I voted for Nixon

. . . I had no other choice because of the other guy."

The end for Richard Nixon finally was announced to the crowd over a public address system, but no one seemed to really take much notice. Four or five persons let out a sigh, or what might be interpreted as a moan, but dozens didn't stop the ritual of their game.

"These Bingo people are a different breed," observes Joe Hurley. He doesn't understand how they can be so unconcerned.

Decision expected by December

Progress slow in W. Strong St. suit

The W. Strong Street zoning suit is still in court with final resolution of the case expected by December, about a year-and-a-half after the trial was completed.

Residents in the W. Strong Street area are appealing a court decision issued in April, 1973, which allows 47 six-flat apartments to be built on scattered lots in their neighborhood. The appeal is progressing slowly, with the last written argument filed last week.

Attorney John Burke, representing the residents, said he expects oral arguments to take place in late September or early October.

"Whenever the court has time, they will set it for oral arguments. It can vary from one to several months before the decision will come down," Burke said, noting that he did not expect a decision until November or December.

THE LENGTH and expense of the appeal procedure has had its toll on the group of residents that originally challenged the village's decision to zone the area for apartments. While a small group of residents is continuing the suit, others have dropped out for financial reasons, and some have sold their homes and moved away.

Burke, however, declined to say how many residents are continuing with the suit. He also declined to comment on the arguments being presented in the appeal except to say "basically the trial court was in error."

While no figures were available on the cost of the suit to the residents, the village has paid at least $10,441.20 in legal fees in the case.

Village Mgr. George Passolt said he does not have a full accounting of the legal fees paid to attorney Jack Siegel, who defended the village in the suit. Last May, the village paid Siegel $7,421.40 for trial work. This month the village paid Siegel an additional $3,019.80 for work on the appeal.

PASSOLT SAID the village has had other expenses associated with the case, such as the cost of printing the village's appeal brief. The village also paid Rolf Campbell to testify as the village's expert land planner.

Plans to bring sewer and water lines to the W. Strong Street neighborhood also have been delayed by the appeal. The major part of the utility lines are to be installed by developer Victor Smigel, who is planning to build the six-flat apartments.

The village has proposed installing lines in sections not affected by Smigel's development, but these lines cannot be laid until Smigel's part of the project is completed.

Smigel has halted all work on the apartments until the suit is settled, and the foundations for the buildings have been sitting unattended for more than two years.

More residents in the area currently are using wells and septic systems.

Susan Rose gets board post

Susan Tripp Rose of Buffalo Grove will complete the term of School Dist. 21 Board of Education member Mary Jo Reid which expires next April. Mrs. Reid resigned earlier this summer to take a full-time, paid position with the district.

Mrs. Rose, 33, of 174 Timber Hill Rd., was appointed to the school board Thursday night. She was picked for the job from among seven candidates who were interviewed by the school board last week.

An active volunteer and PTA board member at Alcott School, Buffalo Grove, Mrs. Rose said in her interview that she is especially interested in heightening the school board's awareness of community concerns.

MRS. ROSE SUGGESTED school board members offer to speak at meetings of community organizations about education matters in the district. She also has recommended board members try to spend time at various local schools talking with teachers, students and parents.

A resident of the district for six years, Mrs. Rose is a member of the Buffalo Grove Junior Woman's Club, the American Assn. of University Women and has served on the Dist. 21 Citizen's Task Force on Education.

Mrs. Rose received a bachelor's degree in biology and master's degree in school administration from Indiana University. She is a former substitute teacher in Dist. 21 schools.

IN REPLACING Mrs. Reid, Mrs. Rose will serve on the Dist. 21 school board until the regular school board election next April.

Mrs. Reid began her job this week as public relations and volunteer coordinator for the district. She submitted her resignation from the school board last month, after serving for almost nine years.

Late school signup Aug. 28

Late registration for St. Joseph the Worker School, Wheeling, will be conducted Aug. 28 from 10 a.m. to noon at the school, 171 W. Dundee Rd.

All parents who want to enroll their children for the upcoming 1974-75 school year, but who did not do so last spring, may enroll children at the late registration, said principal John Topper.

Along with late registration, the school will also sponsor a book exchange and a uniform sale. Students who ordered uniforms earlier may pick them up at registration.

The book exchange will allow students to purchase used textbooks, Topper said. Tuition for the school year will be the same as last year. Charges are $200 for one child, $250 for two, $300 for three and $25 for each additional student in the same family.

Parents interested in arranging for bus service for their children also may do so on the registration day.

Classes for all students at St. Joseph's are scheduled to begin Tuesday, Sept. 3, from 8:45 to 11:50 a.m. The first full day of classes will be Sept. 4.

Burglar steals $400 in watches, sunglasses

Wheeling police are seeking a burglar, who stole $400 worth of Timex wristwatches and sunglasses from the Ben Franklin Store, 1920 S. Wolf Rd.

Police said the burglar apparently gained entry late Tuesday or early Wednesday morning, by throwing a rock through the store's glass entrance.

The store closed at 9 p.m. Tuesday, and the burglary was not discovered until 9 a.m. Wednesday, when it was reopened.

Sent to Bakalis Thursday

Report denies child abuse charges at Dwyer School

by KATHERINE BOYCE

Charges of child abuse at Dwyer School in Arlington Heights are denied in a report sent to State School Supt. Michael Bakalis Thursday by the school's governing board.

The report reaffirms the board's support of John Whipple, former clinical director of Dwyer School, whose certificate for school psychology was suspended Wednesday by Cook County Schools Supt. Richard Martwick.

Martwick suspended the certificate following an investigation of charges of improper operation of the school for emotionally disturbed children. The charges, which came from teachers and former teachers at Dwyer, included child abuse, improper certification of some of the staff at Dwyer and unprofessional activities by some of the staff in the presence of the children.

THURSDAY'S REPORT was prepared following an investigation of the charges by members of the governing board of the Northwest Educational Cooperative

(NEC), which operates Dwyer School.

In its report the board "categorically denies that deliberate use of unusual or excessive force" occurred at the school in recent months and it "reiterates its support of John Whipple as school psychologist and believes results he has obtained with these children attests to his competence in the prescription of proper therapy."

The board acknowledges in the report that "accidental injury" to students and teachers can happen in a school for emotionally disturbed children and that several of the instances of injury to children listed in the charges were caused by accident.

Charges of child abuse have been "exposed to be overstated or fallacious" according to the report and four specific child abuse charges against Whipple were refuted.

THE BOARD ANSWERED the charge of improper certification by saying in the report that it would continue to hire uncertified personnel on a temporary basis

if it could not hire certified staff members. Two uncertified staff members are now employed at Dwyer.

One of the teachers said Thursday she was surprised by portions of the governing board report. The teacher, who asked not to be identified, said there is a fine line between therapeutic and non-therapeutic punishment, but added "Some of what I saw was child abuse." She said she was "100 per cent sure" the charges she made involved child abuse. "I'm sure much of this is open to a great deal of interpretation," she said. "I think this is what the board is trying to do."

Whipple and his attorney are out-of-town and could not be reached for comment. Whipple has until Aug. 16 to appeal the suspension of his certificate to the State Teacher Certification Board. The board can reinstate the certificate, suspend or revoke it.

Officials in Martwick's office and Bakalis's office said they are withholding comment on the NEC report until they have a chance to review it.

Completion set for spring

Dodge dealership construction begins

Grand Spaulding Dodge has broken ground for its new dealership in Buffalo Grove and officials say they hope to have the franchise in operation by next spring.

Grand Spaulding had originally hoped to open the dealership this fall, but the start of construction was delayed by a two-month strike by cement and material truck drivers.

Len Krause, president of the firm, said Thursday construction progress will depend on the availability of construction materials and manpower.

THE FRANCHISE IS being built on an eight-acre site at the southeast corner of Arlington Heights and Dundee roads. Krause said completion of the project is not that urgent since construction on Dundee Road is not yet finished. Grand Spaulding would rather not open until the road is completed, he said.

The dealership will consist of one building housing a showroom, service facility and parts and accessory shop. The franchise will sell autos and small trucks.

Krause estimates the new dealership will do about $17 million in business annually, thus generating about $170,000 in sales tax revenue each year.

After the new franchise opens, Krause said, Grand Spaulding will continue to operate its current dealership at 3300 W. Grand Ave., Chicago.

In addition to new car sales, Grand Spaulding will expand its leasing division to the Buffalo Grove location.

SEVERAL MONTHS ago The Herald disclosed that Buffalo Grove had been selling village vehicle stickers to the firm's leasing division for the last three years, even though Grand Spaulding did not yet have a franchise in Buffalo Grove. Buffalo Grove stickers are $10 each, cheaper than Chicago licenses.

Following the disclosure, village officials ordered a stop to the practice and said they would not resume selling stickers to Grand Spaulding until its leasing division is opened in Buffalo Grove.

Grand Spaulding officials have maintained the sticker sales were legal, since the firm was a landowner in the village.

The Chicago city clerk's office was investigating the sticker sales and had considered taking action against Grand Spaulding for the loss of revenue, but two months ago dropped the probe.

Nixon resigns as 37th President; Ford to take oath today at noon

A President steps down . . .

WITH AN AIR of determined optimism, President Nixon said his farewell to the nation Thursday night. Today at noon, he will become a former President of the United States and return to his home in California.

by BOB LAHEY

Richard Milhous Nixon, 37th President of the United States, abdicated his office last night with this final message to the nation:

"May God's grace be with you in all the days ahead."

In a message anticipated since the final devastating evidence of his participation in the Watergate coverup was made public Monday, the President said he would depart his office at noon today, at which time Vice President Gerald Ford will become the 38th President.

NIXON, repeating a familiar phrase that he has "never been a quitter," declared that leaving office is "abhorrent to every instinct in my body." But, he said, he was compelled to put the interests of America first.

He made only veiled references to his misconduct in the aftermath of the Watergate burglary, which led to his becoming the first President ever to abandon his office.

At one point he said he regretted deeply "any injuries" he might have caused the nation. But, he said, "If some of my decisions were wrong—and some were wrong,"—they were made in the belief that they were in the best interests of the nation.

DISPLAYING none of physical signs of stress that have been attributed to him in recent appearances, the President spoke in steady and measured tones, although there was an unmistakable timbre of emotion in his televised comments.

This was evident when he spoke of more than a quarter century of public service and added with obvious reference to the events that led to his departure from office: "Sometimes I have succeeded; sometimes I have failed."

In what was widely described as a conciliatory speech to the nation, Mr. Nixon acknowledged the "great sadness" that his decision to resign caused him. But he expressed confidence in Ford and asked the "understanding, patience, and cooperation of all Americans" for the new President.

NIXON GAVE as the chief reason for his resignation the erosion of support for him in the Congress. That support dis-

Ford silent at first; says he's ready

WASHINGTON (UPI)—A solemn Vice President Gerald R. Ford emerged from a momentous hour-long meeting with President Nixon in the Oval Office Thursday where a White House aide said he was formally informed of the President's intention to resign.

Alone and solemn-faced, Ford strode across the street to seclusion in his own office in the Executive Office Building without speaking to reporters clustered in a light rain on the lawn.

Minutes later, House Democratic Leader Thomas P. O'Neill said Ford will be sworn in as the 38th U.S. President Friday afternoon.

Sec. of State Henry A. Kissinger called on Ford in his office at the Executive Office Building shortly before 2 p.m.

CDT. A spokesman said the meeting was arranged at the Vice President's request. FORD HAD BEEN summoned to the White House after completing a medal of honor awards ceremony in nearby Blair House. Reporters swarmed around him as he left there, but he only shook his head at their shouted questions.

Earlier, he had canceled plans for a flying trip to the West Coast and other areas.

Ford had maintained for two days the self-imposed silence he pledged Monday on all questions relating to Nixon, impeachment or resignation.

But in an interview published Thursday in the New York Times, he was asked if he was prepared for the job if it should come about.

"No question about it," Ford was quoted as replying. "I think I have worked real hard . . . I've been in every department, met with the secretary and top staff of every department of government, at their place, not at mine . . . I don't know what more I could have done."

FORD WILL BE the first U.S. President not chosen by popular election. He was selected by Nixon Oct. 12, 1973, to replace Spiro T. Agnew, who resigned after pleading no contest to a charge of tax evasion.

Ford was sworn in as Vice President Dec. 6, and has spent much of his time since then traveling around the nation in an effort to unify and rally the scandal-shattered Republican party.

The Vice President's normally talkative staff either was hard to reach or unable to respond to questions. But the night before, press aide Paul Mitchell denied that the staff had been told to prepare for the Presidency.

Ford was reported to have been told by White House Chief of Staff Alexander Haig Wednesday that he should prepare himself for a transition of power. One of the first tasks facing him would be to select his own Vice President — to complete the first non-elected administration ever.

Legionnaires react to resignation

'We grew up believing the President's right'

by DOUG RAY

There were many up to the very end who didn't believe President Nixon would really quit.

And when he told the country over national television, the bartender said in a low, almost choking voice, "dammit."

At the Arlington Heights American Legion Hall Thursday night, dozens played Bingo while the President told the world he would step aside. At the same time, Legionnaires talked about the man to whom they had given their vote to carry their flag and their thoughts. To them, the fall of Richard M. Nixon was something very chilling.

Minutes before the announcement, Joe Hurley, one of the post officers, wasn't sure the President really would go through with it. "Maybe he'll just step aside for awhile . . . he's a strong man, but when you see these things come out, I just don't know." He shook his head and talked about the man in whom he had placed his trust.

"It's pretty hard to accept this. We grew up with the idea the country is always right and the President, too," said Hurley.

"I'll tell you one thing, Nixon's a good man to have in your corner—at least when it comes to foreign affairs. If Ford comes in, I just hope he'll be a good one. I guess only time will tell."

Then there was H. C. Kibbie, 75, a man who has seen many a president come and go and every year he loses a bit more respect for them all; in fact, all politicians. "Sure I voted for Nixon

. . . I had no other choice because of the other guy."

The end for Richard Nixon finally was announced to the crowd over a public address system, but no one seemed to really take much notice. Four or five persons let out a sigh, or what might be interpreted as a moan, but dozens didn't stop the ritual of their game.

"These Bingo people are a different breed," observes Joe Hurley. He doesn't understand how they can be so unconcerned.

Parents delay boundary change recommendations

by BOB GALLAS

Angry Elk Grove Township Dist. 59 parents have forced the boundary committee to delay recommendations on changes which would send Mount Prospect elementary school children into Des Plaines schools.

About 20 parents from Brentwood and High Ridge Knolls schools in Des Plaines turned out at a boundary committee meeting Tuesday which was originally called to draw up a final recommendation on changes for the board of education.

However, by the time the meeting was over, parents from the two schools had succeeded in delaying the recommendation while gaining representation on the committee.

Committee chairman Nita Stamm said meetings are planned which will look at enrollment of seven schools. The first such meeting was scheduled for last night.

Mrs. Stamm voted against delaying the recommendation and also against seating representatives from the two Des Plaines schools on the committee. She later accused parents from the schools of having the wrong motives for being against the boundary shift.

"Let's face it, they just don't want blacks or apartment kids going to their school," said Mrs. Stamm. "It doesn't matter if the kids go to any other school as long as it's not theirs," said Mrs. Stamm.

The proposed change that had been considered by the committee would basically affect children in the John Jay School area of Mount Prospect.

The proposal the committee had intended to recommend to the school board eventually would send an estimated 50 John Jay children from Crystal Towers and Forest Cove apartments to Brentwood School and an estimated 26 children from Laurel Estates apartments to High Ridge Knolls School.

Only about 15 additional children would be sent to the two schools this fall as a result of the change, according to Mrs. Stamm.

Another meeting also was set for Tuesday, when the committee hopes to reach a conclusion in order to meet a presentation deadline to the board of Aug. 19.

Meanwhile, the committee plans to look at enrollment figures of seven district schools, Einstein, Devonshire, High Ridge Knolls and Brentwood schools in Des Plaines, plus John Jay, Forest View and Robert Frost schools in Mount Prospect.

Mrs. Stamm and other members of the committee said they are confident that they will still be able to present a recommendation for board action before the next Aug. 19 meeting.

"This doesn't do away with all the work we've done so far," said Mrs. Stamm. She added that a review of the attendance figures would show that the proposed boundary change was the best that could be worked out.

City studies bond issue to build two overpasses

by STEVE BROWN

City officials are studying the possibility of selling local general corporate bonds to finance the construction of two overpasses in the city.

Mayor Herbert H. Behrel said he would examine the possibility of the city selling bonds to build overpasses to carry River Road over Miner Street and to take Algonquin Road over the Chicago and North Western Ry. outer belt tracks.

Behrel stressed the study for both projects would be preliminary and that the city is still awaiting final decisions from the state on possible funding for the River Road overpass.

THE TECHNIQUE of using city bonds to fund the project was raised Monday by Ald. Joseph Szabo, 1st. The city has had plans for the River Road overpass for several years, but the work has been bogged down.

Plans for the River Road overpass were stymied last year after the Cook County Forest Preserve District balked at allowing the use of its land for a leg of the overpass which would carry Thacker Street over the Des Plaines River.

City officials are currently planning several improvements to the River Road and Miner Street intersection that would provide an interim solution to the traffic congestion there.

The mayor suggested last month that the city should begin giving consideration to the construction of an overpass on Algonquin Road to provide a by-pass for traffic around the railroad.

Behrel said it is more likely the city would give serious consideration to financing the construction of the Algonquin Road overpass because the road is maintained with local funds rather than state or county money.

"WE WOULD RATHER wait and see if money will be available through the state or federal government for the River Road overpass," the mayor said.

The mayor added that he sees no final decision on either project in the immediate future.

For golf course development

Prospect mayor backs Rob Roy plans

by MARCIA KRAMER

Mount Prospect Mayor Robert D. Teichert said Thursday he supports the general concept of plans to develop 2,350 apartment and condominium units on the Rob Roy Golf Course.

Saying it is "not realistic" that the 200-acre course could remain undeveloped, the mayor described the plans submitted by Kenroy Inc., Skokie, as "a reasonable proposal."

"The concept of the development — the density, saving open space — is not unreasonable," he said. "Whether I would vote for the specific plan would depend on that plan."

The mayor's comments — his first public pronouncement on the development plans — came a day after the village's zoning board of appeals voted to recommend that the village board turn down the Kenroy bid to annex the property to Mount Prospect and rezone it for multifamily use.

Other village board members have expressed cautious endorsement of the Kenroy plans, with reservations about the retention of a golf course.

TEICHERT, WHILE supporting the concept of the plans, indicated he would be willing to uphold the zoning board's recommendation and let Kenroy seek rezoning in Cook County.

"The zoning board has indicated basically they don't want it in town," he said. "I go for a more practical approach on things. There is a piece of empty land there that is not in Mount Prospect. It's going to be developed. What we're really talking about is should it be developed in Mount Prospect or in the county. As I read the vote, it should be in the county. I'm about at that point myself. We should wipe our hands clean of the thing and let happen whatever happens."

Kenroy officials have stated that if their attempt to annex the golf course to Mount Prospect fails, they would turn to the county in an effort to rezone the property. It lies east of Wheeling Road between Camp McDonald Road and Euclid Avenue in unincorporated Wheeling Township.

MUCH OF THE zoning board's discussion of the project Wednesday night was based on conditions tentatively arranged by Kenroy. Among them: Dist. 28 would receive $160,000 from the developer provided a referendum to build a school passes and land is acquired from River Trails Park District; and the park district would be given title to about half the property to retain an 18-hole golf course, provided a $1.2 million general obligation bond referendum passes and the district markets another $1 million in revenue bonds.

Teichert denounced both deals as "blackmail," noting that homeowners are not asked to make contributions as a condition of annexation or zoning. "I'm not voting for something just because they're going to give money. We don't build the community based on what the school district says it needs."

He described opponents to the development as "not talking about saving a golf course; they're talking about fighting apartments." As for retaining Rob Roy as a golf course, Teichert said: "We're overloaded with golf courses. We already have two for the community; Christ, how many can you support?"

Patrolman Neis wins commendation

Patrolman Robert Neis was awarded a police department commendation Thursday afternoon from Chief Arthur Hintz for restraining a man earlier this month who was threatening police and firemen with an axe.

No one was injured in the incident but the man, a Forest Hospital patient, was returned to the institution after being taken into custody.

According to reports, the man had set fire to an auto and was threatening firefighters when police arrived. Neis wrestled the man down.

Auditors to discuss revenue sharing funds

A special public hearing and Elk Grove Township board of auditors meeting will be held Tuesday to discuss changes in the township's federal revenue-sharing budget.

The hearing will begin at 7:30 p.m. in the township hall, 2400 S. Arlington Heights Rd., Arlington Heights. The auditors' meeting, to take final action on the budget, will follow.

The budget changes were made at the July 1 board of auditors meeting. Then, the auditors approved allocating $15,000 each to two mental health services, Northwest Suburban Alcohol-Drug Abuse Prevention and the Northwest Special Recreation Assn. They also approved giving $7,020 to the Northwest Opportunity Center.

The auditors also allocated $5,000 for a Homemakers service, which would provide temporary domestic help, such as a cook for someone who is disabled. Originally $12,000 was budgeted, but the amount was reduced because the auditor did not anticipate much demand for it.

Fire damages township garage

A flash fire caused an undetermined amount of damage to a Maine Township garage and hospitalized Township Highway Comr. Edward Koehler with mild burns.

The fire ignited Wednesday afternoon at the garage, 1209 Redecker Rd., while Koehler was using gasoline to clean up some spilled tar, according to fire department reports. The gas fumes came in contact with a nearby hot water heater pilot light.

Deputy Fire Chief David Clark said some damage was caused to three trucks and other equipment inside the building. A damage estimate was being compiled and was unavailable Thursday afternoon.

Koehler, who suffered minor burns on his hands and legs, was treated and released at Holy Family Hospital. Des Plaines firefighter, Capt. Charles Gedroic suffered a slight injury and fireman James Pratt suffered small cuts while fighting the blaze. Both were treated and released, a Holy Family spokesman said.

Police search for motive

Bomb destroys auto parked in 3 Fountains complex

by STEVE FORSYTH

Rolling Meadows police are seeking possible motives for an explosion that obliterated a parked car and damaged several others Wednesday night.

Police Chief Lewis Case said a high charge of explosive was placed in the open car at 3200 Carriageway Dr. in the Three Fountains apartment complex. No one was injured in the blast, which occurred at 10:40 p.m., but pieces of glass and metal were found several hundred feet away from the site.

The owner of the 1963 Buick destroyed in the blast was James Lazarus, 2505 Birch Ln., Rolling Meadows. However, he had loaned the car for some time to his son-in-law and daughter, Michael and Patricia Doyle, who reside at 3200 Carriageway Dr.

The impact of the explosion shattered several windows of the apartment building facing the parking lot, and threw the roof of the car over the top of the three-story building. It landed in the street on the other side.

LAZARUS SAID he could think of no one who would have a grudge against his family. There also is speculation that someone could have been angry with the apartment management firm, but police have confirmed none of these motives.

Lazarus' 16-year-old son, Michael, who was visiting his sister, was just about to walk out the patio doors of the apartment to his car in the parking lot when the blast occurred. Another family had parked next to the bombed vehicle moments before the explosion, but was inside the building when it came.

Witnesses said there was a bright flash, but no fire. One bystander said he could smell gunpowder afterwards. Case said the bomb could have been made with dynamite, but there has been no determination yet. He said fragments of the car have been sent to Washington, D.C., for analysis by the U.S. Treasury Dept.

Case and an officer from the Chicago police bomb squad sifted through the rubble until 3:30 a.m. looking for clues. Despite the other damage, Case said an unbroken bottle of soda pop was found under the car.

THE EXPLOSION was lessened somewhat because the car windows were open, Case said. He theorized that the explosion force went through the bottom of the car, bounced off the pavement and went back through the car, lifting the roof off.

The vacuum created by the blast prevented a fire, Case said. Lazarus said the gasoline tank was full at the time of the explosion.

A gasoline tank on another car exploded about three weeks ago in the same lot, but Case said there was no evidence to indicate it was started by a bomb. He said it could have been the result of overflowing gasoline ignited by something. Police have not connected the two incidents.

NO ONE WAS in the immediate area at the time of the Wednesday night blast and no one was injured in the apartment building, although pictures were shaken off the walls, closet shelves were dumped and the windows were shattered. The explosion was heard in most of Rolling Meadows and parts of Arlington Heights.

As other apartment residents examined the damage Thursday morning, one woman said, "My paintings all fell off the wall and my door is jammed." She looked at her own new car, covered with bits of glass, and added, "I'm getting out of here."

Case said his department is tracking down whatever leads it can get, while awaiting the bomb report from Washington. There was no estimate of total damage.

Alcoholism board member named

Mrs. Frederic Burrows of Des Plaines, a director of volunteer workers at Lutheran General Hospital has been named an executive board member of the recently-formed Maine Township Council on Alcoholism.

Mrs. Burrows, 1734 Sherwood Rd., was selected for the board by Township Auditor Margaret Wirsén, the council president.

Mrs. Burrows will serve as an organizing and coordinating consultant for the council's volunteer workers.

A Lutheran General employee since 1959, Mrs. Burrows also authored a book on the use of volunteer workers.

Her appointment to the council follows the naming of another Des Plaines resident, Jack Callaghan, 373 Cornell Ave., as the executive director.

Callaghan, named director last week by Mrs. Wirsén served as a Des Plaines alderman from 1957 to 1961.

Nixon resigns as 37th President; Ford to take oath today at noon

A President steps down . . .

WITH AN AIR of determined optimism, President Nixon said his farewell to the nation Thursday night. Today at noon, he will become a former President of the United States and return to his home in California.

by BOB LAHEY

Richard Milhous Nixon, 37th President of the United States, abdicated his office last night with this final message to the nation:

"May God's grace be with you in all the days ahead."

In a message anticipated since the final devastating evidence of his participation in the Watergate coverup was made public Monday, the President said he would depart his office at noon today, at which time Vice President Gerald Ford will become the 38th President.

NIXON, repeating a familiar phrase that he has "never been a quitter," declared that leaving office is "abhorrent to every instinct in my body." But, he said, he was compelled to put the interests of America first.

He made only veiled references to his misconduct in the aftermath of the Watergate burglary, which led to his becoming the first President ever to abandon his office.

At one point he said he regretted deeply "any injuries" he might have caused the nation. But, he said, "If some of my decisions were wrong—and some were wrong"—they were made in the belief that they were in the best interests of the nation.

DISPLAYING none of physical signs of stress that have been attributed to him in recent appearances, the President spoke in steady and measured tones, although there was an unmistakable timbre of emotion in his televised comments.

This was evident when he spoke of more than a quarter century of public service and added with obvious reference to the events that led to his departure from office: "Sometimes I have succeeded; sometimes I have failed."

In what was widely described as a conciliatory speech to the nation, Mr. Nixon acknowledged the "great sadness" that his decision to resign caused him. But he expressed confidence in Ford and asked the "understanding, patience, and cooperation of all Americans" for the new President.

NIXON GAVE as the chief reason for his resignation the erosion of support for him in the Congress. That support dis-

Ford silent at first; says he's ready

WASHINGTON (UPI)—A solemn Vice President Gerald R. Ford emerged from a momentous hour-long meeting with President Nixon in the Oval Office Thursday where a White House aide said he was formally informed of the President's intention to resign.

Alone and solemn-faced, Ford strode across the street to seclusion in his own office in the Executive Office Building without speaking to reporters clustered in a light rain on the lawn.

Minutes later, House Democratic Leader Thomas P. O'Neill said Ford will be sworn in as the 38th U.S. President Friday afternoon.

Sec. of State Henry A. Kissinger called on Ford in his office at the Executive Office Building shortly before 2 p.m.

A look at Gerry Ford: his life and our future. Page 9.

CDT. A spokesman said the meeting was arranged at the Vice President's request.

FORD HAD BEEN summoned to the White House after completing a medal of honor awards ceremony in nearby Blair House. Reporters swarmed around him as he left there, but he only shook his head at their shouted questions.

Earlier, he had canceled plans for a flying trip to the West Coast and other areas.

Ford had maintained for two days the self-imposed silence he pledged Monday on all questions relating to Nixon, impeachment or resignation.

But in an interview published Thursday in the New York Times, he was asked if he was prepared for the job if it should come about.

"No question about it," Ford was quoted as replying. "I think I have worked real hard . . . I've been to every department, met with the secretary and top staff of every department of government, at their place, not at mine . . . I don't know what more I could have done."

FORD WILL BE the first U.S. President not chosen by popular election. He was selected by Nixon Oct. 12, 1973, to replace Spiro T. Agnew, who resigned after pleading no contest to a charge of tax evasion.

Ford was sworn in as Vice President Dec. 6, and has spent much of his time since then traveling around the nation in an effort to unify and rally the scandal-shattered Republican party.

The Vice President's normally talkative staff either was hard to reach or unable to respond to questions. But the night before, press aide Paul Millich denied that the staff had been told to prepare for the Presidency.

Ford was reported to have been told by White House Chief of Staff Alexander Haig Wednesday that he should prepare himself for a transition of power. One of the first tasks facing him would be to select his own Vice President — to complete the first non-elected administration ever.

Legionnaires react to resignation

'We grew up believing the President's right'

by DOUG RAY

There were many up to the very end who didn't believe President Nixon would really quit.

And when he told the country over national television, the bartender said in a low, almost choking voice, "dammit."

At the Arlington Heights American Legion Hall Thursday night, dozens played Bingo while the President told the world he would step aside. At the same time, Legionnaires talked about the man to whom they had given their vote to carry their flag and their thoughts. To them, the fall of Richard M. Nixon was something very chilling.

Minutes before the announcement, Joe Hurley, one of the post officers, wasn't sure the President really would go through with it. "Maybe he'll just step aside for awhile . . . he's a strong man, but when you see these things come out, I just don't know." He shook his head and talked about the man in whom he had placed his trust.

"It's pretty hard to accept this. We grew up with the idea the country is always right and the President, too," said Hurley.

"I'll tell you one thing, Nixon's a good man to have in your corner—at least when it comes to foreign affairs. If Ford comes in, I just hope he'll be a good one. I guess only time will tell."

Then there was H. C. Kibbie, 75, a man who has seen many a president come and go and every year he loses a bit more respect for them all; in fact, all politicians. "Sure I voted for Nixon

. . . I had no other choice because of the other guy."

The end for Richard Nixon finally was announced to the crowd over a public address system, but no one seemed to really take much notice. Four or five persons let out a sigh, or what might be interpreted as a moan, but dozens didn't stop the ritual of their game.

"These Bingo people are a different breed," observes Joe Hurley. He doesn't understand how they can be so unconcerned.

Park board names Sherie Shapiro to fill Ramey seat

by BOB GALLAS

The Elk Grove Park District Board of Commissioners wasted no time in filling an unexpected vacancy on the board when member Jack Ramey submitted his surprise resignation Thursday night.

Ramey cited a business promotion as the major reason for his resignation. He had been on the board since April, 1973.

The board named Sherie Shapiro to fill the remainder of Ramey's term, which expires next spring. Mrs. Shapiro had applied to serve on park board in May after Martin Durkin's resignation and was regarded by board members as a leading candidate for Durkin's seat. That seat eventually was filled by David von Schaumburg.

Jack Ramey

park board since 1967 and is only the second woman ever to sit on the board.

Both Mrs. Shapiro and von Schaumburg will be faced with reelection in early 1975 and both have earlier indicated they plan to run.

The seat Mrs. Shapiro now holds originally was held by Daniel Gilbert, who resigned in April, 1973, and was replaced by Ramey, who ran in an election for the unexpired six-year term.

Von Schaumburg, who was recently appointed to fill Durkin's unexpired term which still has two years remaining. Law requires however, that an election be held for the remaining two years as soon as regular elections come up.

Bomb destroys auto parked in 3 Fountains complex

by STEVE FORSYTH

Rolling Meadows police are seeking possible motives for an explosion that obliterated a parked car and damaged several others Wednesday night.

Police Chief Lewis Case said a high charge of explosive was placed in the open car at 5200 Carriageway Dr. in the Three Fountains apartment complex. No one was injured in the blast, which occurred at 10:40 p.m., but pieces of glass and metal were found several hundred feet away from the site.

The owner of the 1963 Buick destroyed in the blast was James Lazarus, 2505 Birch Ln., Rolling Meadows. However, he had loaned the car for some time to his son-in-law and daughter, Michael and Patricia Doyle, who reside at 5200 Carriageway Dr.

The impact of the explosion shattered several windows of the apartment building facing the parking lot, and threw the roof of the car over the top of the three-story building. It landed in the street on the other side.

LAZARUS SAID he could think of no one who would have a grudge against his family. There also is speculation that someone could have been angry with the apartment management firm, but police have confirmed none of these motives.

Lazarus' 16-year-old son, Michael, who was visiting his sister, was just about to walk out the patio doors of the apartment to his car in the parking lot when the blast occurred. Another family had parked next to the bombed vehicle moments before the explosion, but was inside the building when it came.

The vacuum created by the blast prevented a fire, Case said. Lazarus said the gasoline tank was full at the time of the explosion.

A gasoline tank on another car exploded about three weeks ago in the same lot, but Case said there was no evidence to indicate it was started by a bomb. He said it could have been the result of overflowing gasoline ignited by something. Police have not connected the two incidents.

NO ONE WAS in the immediate area at the time of the Wednesday night blast and no one was injured in the apartment building, although pictures were shaken off the walls, closet shelves were dumped and the windows were shattered. The explosion was heard in most of Rolling Meadows and parts of Arlington Heights.

As other apartment residents examined the damage Thursday morning, one woman said, "My paintings all fell off the wall and my door is jammed." She looked at her own new car, covered with bits of glass, and added, "I'm getting out of here."

Case said his department is tracking down whatever leads it can get, while awaiting the bomb report from Washington. There was no estimate of total damage.

Committees to weigh officials' wage scale

A review of elected village officials' salaries and various other matters will be discussed by Elk Grove Village trustees at several committee meetings this month.

The personnel committee, under Trustee Nanci Vanderveel's chairmanship, at 7:30 p.m. Aug. 21 will discuss applications for a village planner, an item on the personnel committee's agenda for some months. The group also will meet with the Fraternal Order of Police Lodge No. 35.

The beautification committee, under Trustee Ronald Cherrick's chairmanship, will meet at 7 p.m. that evening.

Aug. 22 the board has set an 8 p.m. joint session between village trustees and the plan commission to discuss the commission's request for consultant services.

Aug. 24 at 9 a.m. trustees will review elected officials' salaries and possibly the number of monthly village board meetings. Trustee Edward Kenna is chairman of the judicial planning and zoning committee, under which this item will be discussed.

The board currently meets each first, second and fourth Tuesday of the month at 8 p.m. in the municipal building at 901 Wellington Ave. Trustees are paid $25 per meeting and the village president's salary is $2,400 a year.

Any increases or decreases in salary voted by this administration would take effect with the next term of office and would not mean any change in the present salary scale.

Also under consideration at the Aug. 24 meeting will be a report on the police central dispatch system now used by Elk Grove Village police.

Elk Grove High band sets Saturday concert

The Elk Grove High School band will perform a concert at Lake Opeka Park, Howard and Lee streets in Des Plaines, at 7:30 p.m. Saturday.

The band has made several appearances this year and will leave for the Illinois State Fair next week. Douglas Peterson directs the band.

Auditors to discuss revenue sharing funds

A special public hearing and Elk Grove Township board of auditors meeting will be held Tuesday to discuss changes in the township's federal revenue-sharing budget.

The hearing will begin at 7:30 p.m. in the township hall, 209 S. Arlington Heights Rd., Arlington Heights. The auditors' meeting, to take final action on the budget, will follow.

The budget changes were made at the July 1 board of auditors meeting. Then, the auditors approved allocating $15,000 each to two mental health services, Northwest Suburban Alcohol-Drug Abuse Prevention and the Northwest Special Recreation Assn. They also approved giving $7,020 to the Northwest Opportunity Center.

The auditors also allocated $5,000 for a Homemakers service, which would provide temporary domestic help, such as a cook for someone who is disabled. Originally $12,000 was budgeted, but the amount was reduced because the auditor did not anticipate much demand for it.

Village weighs ending service

Bus ridership increases; firm seeks new contract

by JERRY THOMAS

Elk Grove Village residents have increased their usage of bus service in the community during the last six months.

The bus service, which was operated on a trial basis, provided daily dial-a-ride service to 1,827 passengers in July, an increase of 150 passengers over the previous month.

At Wednesday's Elk Grove Village transportation committee meeting, members heard Richard Bingham of Davidsmeyer Bus Co., Elk Grove Township, review the last six months of service and talk about a new contract with higher prices and evening service.

The village contracted with Davidsmeyer six months ago on a trial basis for dial-a-ride and commuter service. Passengers paid minimal fares and the village subsidized the bus service.

From the start, the bus service was well accepted by residents and after a few weeks of operation a Saturday run and extra telephone lines to handle calls were added, Bingham said.

VILLAGE TRUSTEES MUST decide by the end of this month whether to discontinue the bus service or sign a new contract with Davidsmeyer.

No decision was made Wednesday because only two committee members, chairman Nanci Vanderveel and George Specs, were present at the meeting. The committee is expected to make a recommendation to the village board before the Aug. 27 village meeting.

mentation to the village board before the Aug. 27 village meeting.

Bingham outlined a proposal for a new contract that included increases in per mile and hourly driver service rates.

He proposed a 3-cent per mile increase and a 25-cent per hour increase for drivers in both the dial-a-ride and commuter service programs. The village currently pays 43 cents per mile and $4.50 per hour for the dial-a-ride driver and bus, and 50 cents per mile and $4.50 per hour for the commuter service.

The committee did discuss extending the daily 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. weekday service by adding a 7 to 10 p.m. run.

ROBERT FRANZ, assistant village manager, said the extended hours plus a special daytime run to Schaumburg's Woodfield Shopping Center also were discussed.

He stressed that the committee just discussed these matters, but will take no action until a full committee meeting.

"I do think, however, there is no doubt that the residents of this village are interested and are using the bus service and officials will take a serious look at continuing the bus service," said Franz.

Elk Grove Village paid $2,325 for the July service with fees collected from daily riders defraying the expense by $458.

For village dial-a-ride service call 437-3769.

Parents delay committee's boundary recommendations

by BOB GALLAS

Angry Elk Grove Township Dist. 59 parents have forced the boundary committee to delay recommendations on changes which would send Mount Prospect elementary school children into Des Plaines schools.

About 20 parents from Brentwood and High Ridge Knolls schools in Des Plaines turned out at a boundary committee meeting Tuesday which was originally called to draw up a final recommendation on changes for the board of education.

However, by the time the meeting was over, parents from the two schools had succeeded in delaying the recommendation while gaining representation on the committee.

Committee chairman Nita Stamm said meetings are planned which will look at enrollment of seven schools. The first such meeting was scheduled for last night.

Mrs. Stamm voted against delaying the recommendation and also against seating representatives from the two Des Plaines Schools on the committee. She later accused parents from the schools of having the wrong motives for being against the boundary shift.

"Let's face it, they just don't want blacks or apartment kids going to their school," said Mrs. Stamm. "It doesn't matter if the kids go to any other school as long as it's not theirs," said Mrs. Stamm.

The proposed change that had been considered by the committee would basically affect children in the John Jay School area of Mount Prospect.

The proposal the committee had intended to recommend to the school board eventually would send an estimated 59 John Jay children from Crystal Towers and Forest Cove apartments to Brentwood School and an estimated 26 children from Laurel Estates apartments to High Ridge Knolls School.

Only about 15 additional children would be sent to the two schools this fall as a result of the change, according to Mrs. Stamm.

Another meeting also was set for Tuesday, when the committee hopes to reach a conclusion in order to meet a presentation deadline to the board of Aug. 19.

Meanwhile, the committee plans to look at enrollment figures of seven district schools, Einstein, Devonshire, High Ridge Knolls and Brentwood schools in Des Plaines, plus John Jay, Forest View and Robert Frost schools in Mount Prospect.

Mrs. Stamm and other members of the committee said they are confident that they will still be able to present a recommendation for board action before the next Aug. 19 meeting.

"This doesn't do away with all the work we've done so far," said Mrs. Stamm. She added that a review of the attendance figures would show that the proposed boundary change was the best that could be worked out.

Report denies child abuse charges at Dwyer School

by KATHERINE BOYCE

Charges of child abuse at Dwyer School in Arlington Heights are denied in a report sent to State School Supt. Michael Bakalis Thursday by the school's governing board.

The report reaffirms the board's support of John Whipple, former clinical director of Dwyer School, whose certificate for school psychology was suspended Wednesday by Cook County Schools Supt. Richard Martwick.

Martwick suspended the certificate following an investigation of charges of improper operation of the school for emotionally disturbed children. The charges, which came from teachers and former teachers at Dwyer, included child abuse, improper certification of some of the staff at Dwyer and unprofessional activities by some of the staff in the presence of the children.

THURSDAY'S REPORT was prepared following an investigation of the charges by members of the governing board of the Northwest Educational Cooperative

(NEC), which operates Dwyer School.

In its report the board "categorically denies that deliberate use of unusual or excessive force" occurred at the school in recent months and it "reiterates its support of John Whipple as school psychologist and believes results he has obtained with these children attest to his competence in the prescription of proper therapy."

The board acknowledges in the report that "accidental injury" to students and teachers can happen in a school for emotionally disturbed children and that several of the instances of injury to children listed in the charges were caused by accident.

Charges of child abuse have been "exposed to be overstated or fallacious" according to the report and four specific child abuse charges against Whipple were refuted.

THE BOARD ANSWERED the charge of improper certification by saying in the report that it would continue to hire uncertified personnel on a temporary basis

if it could not hire certified staff members. Two uncertified staff members are now employed at Dwyer.

One of the teachers said Thursday she was surprised by portions of the governing board report. The teacher, who asked not to be identified, said there is a fine line between therapeutic and non-therapeutic punishment, but added "Some of what I saw was child abuse." She said she was "100 per cent sure" the charges she made involved child abuse. "I'm sure much of this is open to a great deal of interpretation," she said. "I think this is what the board is trying to do."

Whipple and his attorney are out-of-town and could not be reached for comment. Whipple has until Aug. 16 to appeal the suspension of his certificate to the State Teacher Certification Board. The board can reinstate the certificate, suspend or revoke it.

Officials in Martwick's office and Bakalis's office said they are withholding comment on the NEC report until they have a chance to review it.

You're invited to weekly 'happenstance'

Elk Grove Village residents and especially the press were invited Tuesday to attend weekly 7-to-8 p.m. "happenstances," at the Municipal Building, 901 Wellington St.

Village Pres. Charles Zettek commented on an article in last Friday's Herald that revealed Zettek, administrators and some trustees have been regularly gathering before public board meetings to discuss public business, in apparent violation of the Illinois Open Meetings Act.

Zettek had referred to the pre-meeting sessions as "meetings" throughout his announcement, but changed the description to "happenstances," stressing that the previous sessions had not been meetings nor could future ones be so described.

"From now until the end of my term of office I will meet somewhere upstairs, between 7 and 8 p.m., with from 1 to 10 people every Tuesday," Zettek said.

"I can't identify who those people will be, or what we will talk about," he said. "I just want to stress that these are public meetings."

"I'm not sure just when between 7 and 8 p.m. the meetings will start, who will be there or where we will be," he added. "I don't even know if I will always attend the meetings, we will just have to see who comes, especially the press," said Zettek.

"I plan to have my secretary keep a tally of those who attend and especially how many times the press will be there," he said.

ZETTEK WAS critical of a Herald editorial comment that the Elk Grove Village Board of Trustees has violated the Illinois Open Meeting Act.

"We made the terrible mistake of talking to one another while preparing for our meetings," said Zettek.

Zettek had defended the pre-meeting gatherings earlier as a commendable attribute in a village official. He said the meetings were open, not secret. However, there has been no public notice of the sessions, he added.

Residents get clipped for charity

A member of the Des Plaines Lodge 604 of the Loyal Order of the Moose is literally working around the clock to raise money for a Moose charity.

Ronald Parks, owner of Modern Man — Men's Hairstyling will open his Des Plaines shop from 9 a.m. Saturday, Aug. 17, to 9 p.m. Sunday, Aug. 18, with proceeds from all hair cutting and styling to go to the Children of Mooseheart educational fund.

Parks, who recently moved to Elk Grove Village after living in Des Plaines all his life, was employed by Clubman Continental Barber Shop of Des Plaines for five years before opening his own business. Modern Man is located at 1680 S. River Rd., Des Plaines, a block south of Oakton Street.

Mooseheart is a self-contained city in Aurora, where children of Moose members who have lost one or both parents are raised from the cradle to 18 years of age. All residents must have a vocation of their choice before graduation.

Men interested in getting a good haircut for a good cause can make an appointment for the all-night fund raiser by calling 298-0063.

Nixon resigns as 37th President; Ford to take oath today at noon

A President steps down . . .

WITH AN AIR of determined optimism, President Nixon said his farewell to the nation Thursday night. Today at noon, he will become a former President of the United States and return to his home in California.

by BOB LAHEY

Richard Milhous Nixon, 37th President of the United States, abdicated his office last night with this final message to the nation:

"May God's grace be with you in all the days ahead."

In a message anticipated since the final devastating evidence of his participation in the Watergate coverup was made public Monday, the President said he would depart his office at noon today, at which time Vice President Gerald Ford will become the 38th President.

NIXON, repeating a familiar phrase that he has "never been a quitter," declared that leaving office is "abhorrent to every instinct in my body." But, he said, he was compelled to put the interests of America first.

He made only veiled references to his misconduct in the aftermath of the Watergate burglary, which led to his becoming the first President ever to abandon his office.

At one point he said he regretted deeply "any injuries" he might have caused the nation. But, he said, "If some of my decisions were wrong—and some were wrong—they were made in the belief that they were in the best interests of the nation."

DISPLAYING none of physical signs of stress that have been attributed to him in recent appearances, the President spoke in steady and measured tones, although there was an unmistakable timbre of emotion in his televised comments.

This was evident when he spoke of more than a quarter century of public service and added with obvious reference to the events that led to his departure from office: "Sometimes I have succeeded; sometimes I have failed."

In what was widely described as a conciliatory speech to the nation, Mr. Nixon acknowledged the "great sadness" that his decision to resign caused him. But he expressed confidence in Ford and asked the "understanding, patience, and cooperation of all Americans" for the new President.

NIXON GAVE as the chief reason for his resignation the erosion of support for him in the Congress. That support dis-

Ford silent at first; says he's ready

WASHINGTON (UPI)—A solemn Vice President Gerald R. Ford emerged from a momentous hour-long meeting with President Nixon in the Oval Office Thursday where a White House aide said he was formally informed of the President's intention to resign.

Alone and solemn-faced, Ford strode across the street to seclusion in his own office in the Executive Office Building without speaking to reporters clustered in a light rain on the lawn.

Minutes later, House Democratic Leader Thomas P. O'Neill said Ford will be sworn in as the 38th U.S. President Friday afternoon.

Sec. of State Henry A. Kissinger called on Ford in his office at the Executive Office Building shortly before 2 p.m.

A look at Gerry Ford: his life and our future. Page 9.

CDT. A spokesman said the meeting was arranged at the Vice President's request.

FORD HAD BEEN summoned to the White House after completing a medal of honor awards ceremony in nearby Blair House. Reporters swarmed around him as he left there, but he only shook his head at their shouted questions.

Earlier, he had canceled plans for a flying trip to the West Coast and other areas.

Ford had maintained for two days the self-imposed silence he pledged Monday on all questions relating to Nixon, impeachment or resignation.

But in an interview published Thursday in the New York Times, he was asked if he was prepared for the job if it should come about.

"No question about it," Ford was quoted as replying. "I think I have worked real hard . . . I've been to every department, met with the secretary and top staff of every department of government, at their place, not at mine . . . I don't know what more I could have done."

FORD WILL BE the first U.S. President not chosen by popular election. He was selected by Nixon Oct. 12, 1973, to replace Spiro T. Agnew, who resigned after pleading no contest to a charge of tax evasion.

Ford was sworn in as Vice President Dec. 6, and has spent much of his time since then traveling around the nation in an effort to unify and rally the scandal-shattered Republican party.

The Vice President's normally talkative staff either was hard to reach or unable to respond to questions. But the night before, press aide Paul Milkich denied that the staff had been told to prepare for the Presidency.

Ford was reported to have been told by White House Chief of Staff Alexander Haig Wednesday that he should prepare himself for a transition of power. One of the first tasks facing him would be to select his own Vice President — to complete the first non-elected administration ever.

Legionnaires react to resignation

'We grew up believing the President's right'

by DOUG RAY

There were many up to the very end who didn't believe President Nixon would really quit.

And when he told the country over national television, the bartender said in a low, almost choking voice, "dammit."

At the Arlington Heights American Legion Hall Thursday night, dozens played Bingo while the President told the world he would step aside. At the same time, Legionnaires talked about the man to whom they had given their vote to carry their flag and their thoughts. To them, the fall of Richard M. Nixon was something very chilling.

Minutes before the announcement, Joe Hurley, one of the post officers, wasn't sure the President really would go through with it. "Maybe he'll just step aside for awhile . . . he's a strong man, but when you see these things come out, I just don't know." He shook his head and talked about the man in whom he had placed his trust.

"It's pretty hard to accept this. We grew up with the idea the country is always right and the President, too," said Hurley.

"I'll tell you one thing, Nixon's a good man to have in your corner—at least when it comes to foreign affairs. If Ford comes in, I just hope he'll be a good one. I guess only time will tell."

Then there was H. C. Kibble, 75, a man who has seen many a president come and go and every year he loses a bit more respect for them all; in fact, all politicians. "Sure I voted for Nixon

. . . I had no other choice because of the other guy."

The end for Richard Nixon finally was announced to the crowd over a public address system, but no one seemed to really take much notice. Four or five persons let out a sigh, or what might be interpreted as a moan, but dozens didn't stop the ritual of their game.

"These Bingo people are a different breed," observes Joe Hurley. He doesn't understand how they can be so unconcerned.

Bomb rips car parked by apartments

by STEVE FORSYTH

Rolling Meadows police are seeking possible motives for an explosion that obliterated a parked car and damaged several others Wednesday night.

Police Chief Lewis Case said a high charge of explosive was placed in the open car at 5200 Carriageway Dr. in the Three Fountains apartment complex. No one was injured in the blast, which occurred at 10:40 p.m., but pieces of glass and metal were found several hundred feet away from the site.

The owner of the 1963 Buick destroyed in the blast was James Lazarus, 2503 Birch Ln., Rolling Meadows. However, he had loaned the car for some time to his son-in-law and daughter, Michael and Patricia Doyle, who reside at 5200 Carriageway Dr.

The impact of the explosion shattered several windows of the apartment building facing the parking lot, and threw the roof of the car over the top of the three-story building. It landed in the street on the other side.

LAZARUS SAID he could think of no one who would have a grudge against his family. There also is speculation that someone could have been angry with the apartment management firm, but police have confirmed none of these motives.

Lazarus' 16-year-old son, Michael, who was visiting his sister, was just about to walk out the patio doors of the apartment to his car in the parking lot when the blast occurred. Another family had parked next to the bombed vehicle moments before the explosion, but was inside the building when it came.

Witnesses said there was a bright flash, but no fire. One bystander said he could smell gunpowder afterwards. Case said the bomb could have been made with dynamite, but there has been no determination yet. He said fragments of the car have been sent to Washington, D.C., for analysis by the U.S. Treasury Dept.

Case and an officer from the Chicago police bomb squad sifted through the rubble until 3:30 a.m. looking for clues. Despite the other damage, Case said an unbroken bottle of soda pop was found under the car.

THE EXPLOSION was lessened somewhat because the car windows were open, Case said. He theorized that the explosion force went through the bottom of the car, bounced off the pavement and went back through the car, lifting the roof off.

The vacuum created by the blast prevented a fire, Case said. Lazarus said the gasoline tank was full at the time of the explosion.

A gasoline tank on another car exploded about three weeks ago in the same lot, but Case said there was no evidence to indicate it was started by a bomb. He said it could have been the result of overflowing gasoline ignited by something. Police have not connected the two incidents.

NO ONE WAS in the immediate area at the time of the Wednesday night blast and no one was injured in the apartment building, although pictures were shaken off the walls, closet shelves were dumped and the windows were shattered. The explosion was heard in most of Rolling Meadows and parts of Arlington Heights.

As other apartment residents examined the damage Thursday morning, one woman said, "My paintings all fell off the wall and my door is jammed." She looked at her own new car, covered with bits of glass, and added, "I'm getting out of here."

Case said his department is tracking down whatever leads it can get, while awaiting the bomb report from Washington. There was no estimate of total damage.

AN UNDETERMINED amount of explosives destroyed this auto Wednesday night in a parking lot at 5200 Carriageway Dr., Rolling Meadows. Several nearby cars and an apartment building were also damaged by the 10:40 p.m. blast. Police are seeking a motive for the crime. No persons were injured.

School tax rate drops; next year's bills may, too

by MARILYN McDONALD

Residents of Palatine-Rolling Meadows Dist. 15 probably will pay less tax to the district next year.

William Colburn, assistant superintendent for business, estimates that the tax rate will decrease 6 cents for every $100 assessed valuation. This would bring the tax rate down from 2.46 to 2.40. A homeowner with a house valued at $10,000 would now be paying $240 in taxes, a estimated $6 savings over this year. His estimates were made after compiling a tentative 1974-75 budget of $17½ million.

Residents are expected to receive their tax bills for this year within 10 days. Colburn's estimate is for bills payable in 1973.

"We usually add $10 million growth to each year's assessment," Colburn said when asked about estimating future tax revenues. "But in our townships (Palatine, Schaumburg, and Elk Grove) the major growth is over," he added. Most of Dist. 15 lies within Palatine Township.

COLBURN SAID HE still expects the district's assessment to rise, although he is unsure of the $10 million figure. Taxes should go down if the state tax equalization factor remains the same, he said.

In total, the district expects to spend $17,533,546.68 in 1974-75, a 5 per cent increase over last year's total budget. The district expects to take in $16,248,321.81 during the year, to which it is adding its present cash balance of $3,733,323.10. Thus, the district does not expect any deficit spending.

The district's cash balance is healthy at the beginning of its 1974-75 fiscal year because the state paid 38 per cent of this year's tax revenues already. Usually the state has only paid 20 per cent of the year's expected tax revenues by this time, Colburn said.

Additionally, the district received all of the state aid it could possibly receive because of the state legislature's move to fully fund its state aid to education programs this year.

THE EDUCATIONAL fund is once again the largest part of the budget, its $13,093,303.00 comprising about 75 per cent of the total budget. Within the education fund, $9,125,629.00 will go for instructional salaries. This represents 69.6 per cent of the education fund total. Last

Report denies child abuse charges at Dwyer School

by KATHERINE BOYCE
Charges of child abuse at Dwyer School in Arlington Heights are denied in a report sent to State School Supt. Michael Bakalis Thursday by the school's governing board.

The report reaffirms the board's support of John Whipple, former clinical director of Dwyer School, whose certificate for school psychology was suspended Wednesday by Cook County Schools Supt. Richard Martwick.

Martwick suspended the certificate following an investigation of charges of improper operation of the school for emotionally disturbed children. The charges, which came from teachers and former teachers at Dwyer, included child abuse, improper certification of some of the staff at Dwyer and unprofessional activities by some of the staff in the presence of the children.

THURSDAY'S REPORT was prepared following an investigation of the charges by members of the governing board of the Northwest Educational Cooperative

(NEC), which operates Dwyer School.

In its report the board "categorically denies that deliberate use of unusual or excessive force" occurred at the school in recent months and it "reiterates its support of John Whipple as school psychologist and believes results he has obtained with these children attests to his competence in the prescription of proper therapy."

The board acknowledges in the report that "accidental injury" to students and teachers can happen in a school for emotionally disturbed children and that several of the instances of injury to children listed in the charges were caused by accident.

Charges of child abuse have been "exposed to be overstated or fallacious" according to the report and four specific child abuse charges against Whipple were refuted.

THE BOARD ANSWERED the charge of improper certification by saying in the report that it would continue to hire uncertified personnel on a temporary basis

if it could not hire certified staff members. Two uncertified staff members are now employed at Dwyer.

One of the teachers said Thursday she was surprised by portions of the governing board report. The teacher, who asked not to be identified, said there is a fine line between therapeutic and non-therapeutic punishment, but added "Some of what I saw was child abuse." She said she was "100 per cent sure" the charges she made involved child abuse. "I'm sure much of this is open to a great deal of interpretation," she said. "I think this is what the board is trying to do."

Whipple and his attorney are out-of-town and could not be reached for comment. Whipple has until Aug. 16 to appeal the suspension of his certificate to the State Teacher Certification Board. The board can reinstate the certificate, suspend or revoke it.

Officials in Martwick's office and Bakalis's office said they are withholding comment on the NEC report until they have a chance to review it.

Inverness police tax vote set Saturday

Inverness residents will go to the polls Saturday to decide if the village should levy a special tax for police protection.

Residents may vote on the issue from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. at the Inverness Fieldhouse, located at the north end of Highland Road.

The village board called for the referendum because, according to trustees, too much of the village's general fund is being used for police protection. Consequently, road improvements and other needed projects are being delayed, said trustees.

A special tax would provide approximately $50,000 that the village will need to pay for part-time police protection.

According to state law, the village has the power to levy a tax for police protection and the tax can be as high as 40 cents per $100 of assessed valuation, or $70,000, with voter approval.

Inverness currently pays the Palatine Police Dept. $60,500 per year for full-time protection. Based on the advice of a legal consulting firm, the village board is investigating the possibility of contracting service from another department or maintaining the contract with Palatine.

The village's current contract with Palatine terminates in November.

School tax rate decreases year, instructional salaries represented 70.6 of the education fund, or $8,290,459.00.

According to budget estimates, $3,241,432.00 in state aid should be received by the district for its education fund. The district applies for state aid through the resource equalizer formula, in which a high local tax effort is rewarded with high state funding.

The only construction planned for the year will be the completion of a track and other finishing construction at the Palatine Hills Junior High School. The $37,905.66 budgeted for that work is what remains of the bond issue which paid for Palatine Hill's construction.

The total 2.40 anticipated tax rate represents a total of the eight different funds in the budget. Those funds which are now taxing at their individual maximum rate are the education fund (1.61), the operations, building and maintenance fund (.25), the working cash fund (.05) and the life safety fund (.05).

Nixon resigns as 37th President; Ford to take oath today at noon

A President steps down . . .

WITH AN AIR of determined optimism, President Nixon said his farewell to the nation Thursday night. Today at noon, he will become a former President of the United States and return to his home in California.

by BOB LAHEY

Richard Milhous Nixon, 37th President of the United States, abdicated his office last night with this final message to the nation:

"May God's grace be with you in all the days ahead."

In a message anticipated since the final devastating evidence of his participation in the Watergate coverup was made public Monday, the President said he would depart his office at noon today, at which time Vice President Gerald Ford will become the 38th President.

NIXON, repeating a familiar phrase that he has "never been a quitter," declared that leaving office is "abhorrent to every instinct in my body." But, he said, he was compelled to put the interests of America first.

He made only veiled references to his misconduct in the aftermath of the Watergate burglary, which led to his becoming the first President ever to abandon his office.

At one point he said he regretted deeply "any injuries" he might have caused the nation. But, he said, "If some of my decisions were wrong—and some were wrong,"—they were made in the belief that they were in the best interests of the nation.

DISPLAYING none of physical signs of stress that have been attributed to him in recent appearances, the President spoke in steady and measured tones, although there was an unmistakable timbre of emotion in his televised comments.

This was evident when he spoke of more than a quarter century of public service and added with obvious reference to the events that led to his departure from office: "Sometimes I have succeeded; sometimes I have failed."

In what was widely described as a conciliatory speech to the nation, Mr. Nixon acknowledged the "great sadness" that his decision to resign caused him. But he expressed confidence in Ford and asked the "understanding, patience, and cooperation of all Americans" for the new President.

NIXON GAVE as the chief reason for his resignation the erosion of support for him in the Congress. That support dis-

Ford silent at first; says he's ready

WASHINGTON (UPI)—A solemn Vice President Gerald R. Ford emerged from a momentous hour-long meeting with President Nixon in the Oval Office Thursday where a White House aide said he was formally informed of the President's intention to resign.

Alone and solemn-faced, Ford strode across the street to seclusion in his own office in the Executive Office Building without speaking to reporters clustered in a light rain on the lawn.

Minutes later, House Democratic Leader Thomas P. O'Neill said Ford will be sworn in as the 38th U.S. President Friday afternoon.

Sec. of State Henry A. Kissinger called on Ford in his office at the Executive Office Building shortly before 2 p.m.

A look at Gerry Ford: his life and our future. Page 9.

CDT. A spokesman said the meeting was arranged at the Vice President's request.

FORD HAD BEEN summoned to the White House after completing a medal of honor awards ceremony in nearby Blair House. Reporters swarmed around him as he left there, but he only shook his head at their shouted questions.

Earlier, he had canceled plans for a flying trip to the West Coast and other areas.

Ford had maintained for two days the self-imposed silence he pledged Monday on all questions relating to Nixon, impeachment or resignation.

But in an interview published Thursday in the New York Times, he was asked if he was prepared for the job if it should come about.

"No question about it," Ford was quoted as replying. "I think I have worked real hard . . . I've been to every department, met with the secretary and top staff of every department of government, at their place, not at mine . . . I don't know what more I could have done."

FORD WILL BE the first U.S. President not chosen by popular election. He was selected by Nixon Oct. 12, 1973, to replace Spiro T. Agnew, who resigned after pleading no contest to a charge of tax evasion.

Ford was sworn in as Vice President Dec. 6, and has spent much of his time since then traveling around the nation in an effort to unify and rally the scandal-shattered Republican party.

The Vice President's normally talkative staff either was hard to reach or unable to respond to questions. But the night before, press aide Paul Millich denied that the staff had been told to prepare for the Presidency.

Ford was reported to have been told by White House Chief of Staff Alexander Haig Wednesday that he should prepare himself for a transition of power. One of the first tasks facing him would be to select his own Vice President—to complete the first non-elected administration ever.

Legionnaires react to resignation

'We grew up believing the President's right'

by DOUG RAY

There were many up to the very end who didn't believe President Nixon would really quit.

And when he told the country over national television, the bartender said in a low, almost choking voice, "dammit."

At the Arlington Heights American Legion Hall Thursday night, dozens played Bingo while the President told the world he would step aside. At the same time, Legionnaires talked about the man to whom they had given their vote to carry their flag and their thoughts. To them, the fall of Richard M. Nixon was something very chilling.

Minutes before the announcement, Joe Hurley, one of the post officers, wasn't sure the President really would go through with it. "Maybe he'll just step aside for awhile . . . he's a strong man, but when you see these things come out, I just don't know." He shook his head and talked about the man in whom he had placed his trust.

"It's pretty hard to accept this. We grew up with the idea the country is always right and the President, too," said Hurley.

"I'll tell you one thing, Nixon's a good man to have in your corner—at least when it comes to foreign affairs. If Ford comes in, I just hope he'll be a good one. I guess only time will tell."

Then there was H. C. Kibble, 75, a man who has seen many a president come and go and every year he loses a bit more respect for them all; in fact, all politicians. "Sure I voted for Nixon

. . . I had no other choice because of the other guy."

The end for Richard Nixon finally was announced to the crowd over a public address system, but no one seemed to really take much notice. Four or five persons let out a sigh, or what might be interpreted as a moan, but dozens didn't stop the ritual of their game.

"These Bingo people are a different breed," observes Joe Hurley. He doesn't understand how they can be so unconcerned.

AFTERMATH:

While I have never urged the President to resign, I certainly can understand his reasons in view of the apparent overwhelming opposition to his continuing in office. I am personally very sorry that Richard Nixon's public service has ended in such a tragic fashion.

Although history will recall his misdeeds, I hope Americans both today and in future years will give him credit for his accomplishments during his career in the House, the Senate, as Vice President and President.

I join the many friends and former colleagues of our new President, Gerald Ford, in offering my support and my prayers.

—U.S. Rep. Philip M. Crane

I view the President's resignation with mixed emotions. It is certainly a tragedy that Richard Nixon, a man who has made so many contributions to his country as a veteran of World War II, a congressman, a senator, a Vice President and a President should end his career with a resignation under extreme pressure.

I am certain that history will look kindly on many of the accomplishments of Richard Nixon, including his courageous new policies with Russia and China, designed to avoid a nuclear showdown and to substitute negotiations for confrontation.

History will also view kindly his successful efforts in extricating the United States from an ill-conceived participation in the Indo-China war. This was accomplished under most difficult circumstances.

In addition, there is a human side to the situation which involves the man personally, his wife, his children and his relatives. I extend to the members of the Nixon family my sympathy.

On the other hand, we must judge fairly and place the blame where it should fall. Richard Nixon is now paying for the mistakes that he made in attempting to cover up the connection of the Committee to Reelect the President with the Watergate break-in. He compounded his problems by misrepresenting the facts to the American people and the Congress.

I am pleased that the President has chosen to resign. It will eliminate an acrimonious impeachment proceeding.

It should be acknowledged that even though the President resigned, the constitutional process of impeachment caused the resignation. We must continue to have great admiration for the type of government we have, which operated effectively and fairly with due process for all.

I think the nation is fortunate to have an outstanding person in Vice President Ford to assume the Presidency and to carry out the policies which have been approved by the voters of this country in the 1972 elections. Because of my personal acquaintanceship with Vice President Ford, I have great confidence in his ability to unite our nation, to assist us to overcome inflation, and to continue to provide leadership for peace throughout the world.

—U.S. Rep. Samuel H. Young

This is a time of sadness — and hope, too. It is time we got on with the work of preserving peace, restoring the economy, reordering the national priorities, and reforming our political institutions.

And we have reason for renewed confidence in our system of self-government and law.

Gerald Ford will assume the Presidency with my prayers and the respect his high office deserves. He will have my support when he is right, my opposition when he is wrong. I join with all Americans in wishing him well.

—U.S. Sen. Adlai E. Stevenson, III

I think the President has made the right decision — right for the country, right for his family, right for himself.

The unambiguous evidence of wrongdoing has grown so compelling in recent days that his departure from office was inevitable. It is important to understand and remember that the Nixon presidency was brought down finally by the President's own words and actions.

I believe the democratic process has worked and for that I am grateful. But there are scores of human tragedies in Watergate, and tonight my heart goes out to Mr. Nixon's fine family, which has stood so loyally by him through this long and difficult period.

Gerald Ford is a good and decent man. He has my full support as he begins to draw our country back together.

—U.S. Sen. Charles H. Percy

I pledge my full support to Gerald Ford for the success of his administration as President of the United States.

President Nixon's historic action in resigning his office opens a new era and offers each of us a challenge we must accept.

Let us move forward, putting revenge and recrimination behind us, resolved to achieve a government which embodies the finest traits of the American character. Let us resolve that when we differ, we shall respect the motives of our opponents and their right to differ with us, that when we have power, we shall have humility, and that we shall seek what is best for the nation rather than what is best for party, faction or self.

With our sights high, our spirits cleansed and our hopes renewed, let us create that America which is achievable if we apply our vision, our conscience, our courage and our diligence.

—George Burditt, Candidate for U.S. Senator

The person who has brought government to a standstill and made it impossible to function even at the most fundamental level is out of the office. There will be a collective sigh of relief from the country. However, the problems unfortunately will not all go away with Richard M. Nixon. I would hope they would be solved by the new man working with the Congress. The Congress, the President and candidates have to try to find solutions to the biggest set of problems, which I believe are economical.

I am not very sanguine about what has come forward from Vice President Ford. Nor am I very sanguine about his track record as a congressman. Congress and the electorate have to be as vigorous as possible. I am hopeful, but not optimistic. I hope he will not only reject the philosophy of Watergate, but also the economic policies which have brought us to this point.

At the risk of being the rainmaker at the picnic, the problems are still there.

—Abner J. Mikva, Candidate for Congress

I am distressed that the executive branch of government deteriorated so badly that the resignation of the President became inevitable, but with America in such turmoil there was no course except for Mr. Nixon to be immediately removed from power.

Actions for the good of the people should have been considered by Mr. Nixon while he was in office, not as he prepared to resign. I would have preferred Mr. Nixon to invoke the 25th Amendment and give Mr. Ford temporary control of the government while impeachment proceedings were in progress.

The American people are being left with too many unanswered questions. Our nation is now relieved of the burden of Richard M. Nixon. Spiro Agnew and many of his loyal aides. The miseries brought about by the self-serving interests of those people will be on our shoulders for some time to come, but now, under the direction of President Ford, we again concern ourselves with what's good for this country. We are partially out from the shadow.

Our domestic problems, distrust of government, inflation, the high cost of living, the careful selection of our new vice president and other officials, can now receive the high priority they deserve.

This is not the time to consider political gains or losses, but the time when we must all consider what is good for America. That is the job ahead of all of us.

—Betty Spence, Candidate for Congress

'People are concerned about America'

Nixon cheered on visits to suburbs

Richard M. Nixon visited the Northwest suburbs three times during his political career. Each time, the crowds cheered. Each time, they loved him.

He came once as a presidential candidate, twice as the President. He talked of law and order, fighting pollution and back in 1968, of stopping rising prices. As a candidate he told a crowd of high school students, "You will be a great generation and we will give you the leadership you deserve."

His visits drew welcoming crowds to Prospect High School in Mount Prospect — Oct. 19, 1968, and Oct. 23, 1970, and to the Schaumburg Airport Feb. 6, 1970. Northwest suburban residents lined up hours ahead of time hoping to see him and maybe shake his hand.

THE FIRST TIME, Mount Prospect was a stop along the campaign trail and Nixon brought Pat with him. Some 10,000 persons gave up a Saturday morning to hear the Republican candidate and his political pitch.

"I had a feeling as I came through the crowd," Nixon began, "and I feel it now ... it is a sense of victory in the air."

"People are concerned about America," he said, "and when the Republican administration gets into office I pledge this to you, the American flag will not be a doormat for anybody."

He recalled the Eisenhower years and blamed the "men who stumbled through the sixties" for the state of voter discontent.

"You cannot name one area of the world where respect for this country is not low," he said. "The American people know this and they are fed up to here and they're going to vote against the administration that put us where we are today."

THE NEXT TIME he arrived, Nixon was President. It was obvious as 105 uniformed policemen controlled a 6,000-person crowd at the Schaumburg Airport on a cold, damp winter morning. This time his destination was the Hanover Park Water Reclamation Plant, a stop on a suburban anti-pollution tour. First, he made a short speech to the crowd. Wearing no overcoat, the President shook hands and then hopped on the hood of a station wagon, the nearest available podium. He gave a new version of the traditional three R's: reform, restore and renewal.

"Restore our natural resources and renew the spirit of Americans," he said, speaking through a hand microphone connected to fog horns because the public address system wasn't working.

President Nixon returned to the Northwest suburbs seven months later. This time, a White House crew and Secret Service men arrived a week before him to set up security at the high school auditorium. And this time police were investigating a threat against the President's life, which later proved unfounded.

UNLIKE HIS FIRST two visits, the speeches made by the President weren't exactly for himself. He was plugging the campaign of Sen. Ralph Smith, Republican candidate against Adlai Stevenson III.

The President's speech had a familiar ring. Just as he had done for other Republican candidates in the 1970 election, he told the crowd of 4,000 he needed Smith, who was later defeated, to carry out his promises.

"The President of the United States is the most powerful man in the world," Nixon said. "But he can't carry out his programs by himself. He needs help from Senators and Congressmen who will support the programs the people want him to initiate."

Chiding, but not naming, Smith's opponent, Nixon told the crowd the nation needs "law and order men all year long, not just at election time." His speech was interrupted several times, but the longest applause came when he said law enforcement officers should be given respect and backing.

The President repeated his plan to develop "prosperity and peace and progress without war and inflation. People want action now," he said. "That's why I was elected in 1968."

As Nixon left the high school and passed by the group, they shouted, "Give Peace a Chance." The President simply smiled, and flashed back his victory sign.

Rolling Meadows police are seeking possible motives for an explosion that obliterated a parked car and damaged several others Wednesday night.

Police Chief Lewis Case said a high charge of explosive was placed in the open car at 8200 Carriageway Dr. in the Three Fountains apartment complex. No one was injured in the blast, which occurred at 10:40 p.m., but pieces of glass and metal were found several hundred feet away from the site.

AN UNDETERMINED amount of explosives destroyed this auto Wednesday night in a parking lot at 8200 Carriageway Dr., Rolling Meadows. Several nearby cars and an apartment building were also damaged by the 10:40 p.m. blast. Police are seeking a motive for the crime. No persons were injured.

School tax rate drops; next year's bills may, too

by MARILYN McDONALD

Residents of Palatine-Rolling Meadows Dist. 15 probably will pay less tax to the district next year.

William Colburn, assistant superintendent for business, estimates that the tax rate will decrease 6 cents for every $100 assessed valuation. This would bring the tax rate down from 2.46 to 2.40. A homeowner with a house valued at $10,000 would now be paying $240 in taxes, a estimated $6 savings over this year. His estimates were made after compiling a tentative 1974-75 budget of $17½ million.

Residents are expected to receive their tax bills for this year within 10 days. Colburn's estimate is for bills payable in 1975.

"We usually add $10 million growth to each year's assessment," Colburn said when asked about estimating future tax revenues. "But in our townships (Palatine, Schaumburg, and Elk Grove) the major growth is over," he added. Most of Dist. 15 lies within Palatine Township.

COLBURN SAID HE still expects the district's assessment to rise, although he is unsure of the $10 million figure. Taxes should go down if the state tax equalization factor remains the same, he said.

In total, the district expects to spend $17,533,546 in 1974-75, a 5 per cent increase over last year's total budget. The district expects to take in $16,248,321.81 during the year, to which it is adding its present cash balance of $3,733,323.10. Thus, the district does not expect any deficit spending.

The district's cash balance is healthy at the beginning of its 1974-75 fiscal year because the state paid 38 per cent of this year's tax revenues already. Usually the state has only paid 20 per cent of the year's expected tax revenues by this time, Colburn said.

Additionally, the district received all of the state aid it could possibly receive because of the state legislature's move to fully fund its state aid to education programs this year.

THE EDUCATIONAL fund is once again the largest part of the budget, its $13,093,393.00 comprising about 75 per cent of the total budget. Within the education fund, $9,125,629.00 will go for instructional salaries. This represents 69.6 per cent of the education fund total. Last

LAZARUS SAID he could think of no one who would have a grudge against his family. There also is speculation that someone could have been angry with the apartment management firm, but police have confirmed none of those motives.

Lazarus' 16-year-old son, Michael, who was visiting his sister, was just about to walk out the patio doors of the apartment to his car in the parking lot when the blast occurred. Another family had parked next to the bombed vehicle moments before the explosion, but was in side the building when it came.

Witnesses said there was a bright flash, but no fire. One bystander said he could smell gunpowder afterwards. Case said the bomb could have been made with dynamite, but there has been no determination yet. He said fragments of the car have been sent to Washington, D.C., for analysis by the U.S. Treasury Dept.

Case and an officer from the Chicago police bomb squad sifted through the rubble until 3:30 a.m. looking for clues. Despite the other damage, Case said an unbroken bottle of soda pop was found under the car.

THE EXPLOSION was lessened somewhat because the car windows were open, Case said. He theorized that the explosion force went through the bottom of the car, bounced off the pavement and went back through the car, lifting the roof off.

The vacuum created by the blast prevented a fire, Case said. Lazarus said the gasoline tank was full at the time of the explosion.

A gasoline tank on another car exploded about three weeks ago in the same lot, but Case said there was no evidence to indicate it was started by a bomb. He said it could have been the result of overflowing gasoline ignited by something. Police have not connected the two incidents.

NO ONE WAS in the immediate area at the time of the Wednesday night blast and no one was injured in the apartment building, although pictures were shaken off the walls, closet shelves were dumped and the windows were shattered. The explosion was heard in most of Rolling Meadows and parts of Arlington Heights.

As other apartment residents examined the damage Thursday morning, one woman said, "My paintings all fell off the wall and my door is jammed." She looked at her own new car, covered with bits of glass, and added, "I'm getting out of here."

Case said his department is tracking down whatever leads it can get, while awaiting the bomb report from Washington. There was no estimate of total damage.

Sent to Bakalis Thursday

Report denies child abuse charges at Dwyer School

by KATHERINE BOYCE
Charges of child abuse at Dwyer School in Arlington Heights are denied in a report sent to State School Supt. Michael Bakalis Thursday by the school's governing board.

The report reaffirms the board's support of John Whipple, former clinical director of Dwyer School, whose certificate for school psychology was suspended Wednesday by Cook County Schools Supt. Richard Martwick.

Martwick suspended the certificate following an investigation of charges of improper operation of the school for emotionally disturbed children. The charges, which came from teachers and former teachers at Dwyer, included child abuse, improper certification of some of the staff at Dwyer and unprofessional activities by some of the staff in the presence of the children.

THURSDAY'S REPORT was prepared following an investigation of the charges by members of the governing board of the Northwest Educational Cooperative

(NEC), which operates Dwyer School.

In its report the board "categorically denies that deliberate use of unusual or excessive force" occurred at the school in recent months and it "reiterates its support of John Whipple as school psychologist and believes results he has obtained with these children attest to his competence in the prescription of proper therapy."

The board acknowledges in the report that "accidental injury" to students and teachers can happen in a school for emotionally disturbed children and that several of the instances of injury to children listed in the charges were caused by accident.

Charges of child abuse have been "exposed to be overstated or fallacious" according to the report and four specific child abuse charges against Whipple were refuted.

THE BOARD ANSWERED the charge of improper certification by saying in the report that it would continue to hire uncertified personnel on a temporary basis

if it could not hire certified staff members. Two uncertified staff members are now employed at Dwyer.

One of the teachers said Thursday she was surprised by portions of the governing board report. The teacher, who asked not to be identified, said there is a fine line between therapeutic and non-therapeutic punishment, but added "Some of what I saw was child abuse." She said she was "100 per cent sure" the charges she made involved child abuse. "I'm sure much of this is open to a great deal of interpretation," she said. "I think this is what the board is trying to do."

Whipple and his attorney are out-of-town and could not be reached for comment. Whipple has until Aug. 16 to appeal the suspension of his certificate to the State Teacher Certification Board. The board can reinstate the certificate, suspend or revoke it.

Officials in Martwick's office and Bakalis's office said they are withholding comment on the NEC report until they have a chance to review it.

Office-complex OKd by planners

Approval of a 30-building office complex on Hicks Road and Euclid Avenue was granted Wednesday night by the Rolling Meadows Plan Commission.

The development, proposed by Lakewood Industries of Chicago, needs approval from the city council before construction can start.

The proposed complex calls for the construction of 10-building clusters, each composed of three office buildings on the seven acres near the intersection.

The buildings would be one story high and decorated in a Polynesian motif, according to Lynn Babcock, a representative of Lakewood Industries.

The area is located near commercially zoned sites along Hicks Road and near residential land west of the Plum Grove Country subdivision. An existing fence in the area would be extended as a buffer between the new office building complex and residential areas, according to developers.

THE FENCE is a six-foot-high cedar blockade structure. It would be maintained by the developer, James O'Donnell, president of Lakewood Industries, said earlier.

Access to the project would be from Hicks Road and Lincoln Avenue, which border the site on the north. No left turn signs will be posted on the Lincoln Avenue driveway access points to discourage excessive traffic from the project into the Countryside subdivision area.

In a report presented to the plan commission earlier, traffic projections estimated that about 100 cars would be generated by the project during the evening rush hour. If the project is built, O'Donnell has said Lakewood would move its corporate headquarters into the complex, which will be owned and managed by Lakewood.

Estimated cost for the entire project is more than $2 million, Babcock said.

Joins honor society

Therese Grady, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John M. Grady, 4404 Sycamore Ln., Rolling Meadows, was recently elected non-teaching major of the year at Maycrest College, Davenport, Iowa. Miss Maycrest also became a member of Kappa Gamma Pi, a national honor society for women graduates of Catholic Colleges recently.

year, instructional salaries represented 70.6 of the education fund, or $8,208,459.00.

According to budget estimates, $5,241,452.00 in state aid should be received by the district for its education fund. The district applies for state aid through the resource equalizer formula, in which a high local tax effort is rewarded with high state funding.

The only construction planned for the year will be the completion of a track and other finishing construction at the Palatine Hills Junior High School. The $97,903.66 budgeted for that work is what remains of the bond issue which paid for Palatine Hills' construction.

The total 2.40 anticipated tax rate represents a total of the eight different funds in the budget. Those funds which are now taxing at their individual maximum rate are the education fund (1.61), the operations, building and maintenance fund (.25), the working cash fund (.05) and the life safety fund (.05).

Nixon resigns as 37th President; Ford to take oath today at noon

A President steps down . . .

WITH AN AIR of determined optimism, President Nixon said his farewell to the nation Thursday night. Today at noon, he will become a former President of the United States and return to his home in California.

by BOB LAHEY

Richard Milhous Nixon, 37th President of the United States, abdicated his office last night with this final message to the nation:

"May God's grace be with you in all the days ahead."

In a message anticipated since the final devastating evidence of his participation in the Watergate coverup was made public Monday, the President said he would depart his office at noon today, at which time Vice President Gerald Ford will become the 38th President.

NIXON, repeating a familiar phrase that he has "never been a quitter," declared that leaving office is "abhorrent to every instinct in my body." But, he said, he was compelled to put the interests of America first.

He made only veiled references to his misconduct in the aftermath of the Watergate burglary, which led to his becoming the first President ever to abandon his office.

At one point he said he regretted deeply "any injuries" he might have caused the nation. But, he said, "If some of my decisions were wrong—and some were wrong—they were made in the belief that they were in the best interests of the nation."

DISPLAYING none of physical signs of stress that have been attributed to him in recent appearances, the President spoke in steady and measured tones, although there was an unmistakable timbre of emotion in his televised comments.

This was evident when he spoke of more than a quarter century of public service and added with obvious reference to the events that led to his departure from office: "Sometimes I have succeeded; sometimes I have failed."

In what was widely described as a conciliatory speech to the nation, Mr. Nixon acknowledged the "great sadness" that his decision to resign caused him. But he expressed confidence in Ford and asked the "understanding, patience, and cooperation of all Americans" for the new President.

NIXON GAVE as the chief reason for his resignation the erosion of support for him in the Congress. That support dis-

Ford silent at first; says he's ready

WASHINGTON (UPI)—A solemn Vice President Gerald R. Ford emerged from a momentous hour-long meeting with President Nixon in the Oval Office Thursday where a White House aide said he was formally informed of the President's intention to resign.

Alone and solemn-faced, Ford strode across the street to seclusion in his own office in the Executive Office Building without speaking to reporters clustered in a light rain on the lawn.

Minutes later, House Democratic Leader Thomas P. O'Neill said Ford will be sworn in as the 38th U.S. President Friday afternoon.

Sec. of State Henry A. Kissinger called on Ford in his office at the Executive Office Building shortly before 2 p.m.

A look at Gerry Ford: his life and our future. Page 9.

CDT. A spokesman said the meeting was arranged at the Vice President's request. FORD HAD BEEN summoned to the White House after completing a medal of honor awards ceremony in nearby Blair House. Reporters swarmed around him as he left there, but he only shook his head at their shouted questions.

Earlier, he had canceled plans for a flying trip to the West Coast and other areas.

Ford had maintained for two days the self-imposed silence he pledged Monday on all questions relating to Nixon, impeachment or resignation.

But in an interview published Thursday in the New York Times, he was asked if he was prepared for the job if it should come about.

"No question about it," Ford was quoted as replying. "I think I have worked real hard . . . I've been to every department, met with the secretary and top staff of every department of government, at their place, not at mine . . . I don't know what more I could have done."

FORD WILL BE the first U.S. President not chosen by popular election. He was selected by Nixon Oct. 12, 1973, to replace Spiro T. Agnew, who resigned after pleading no contest to a charge of tax evasion.

Ford was sworn in as Vice President Dec. 6, and has spent much of his time since then traveling around the nation in an effort to unify and rally the scandal-shattered Republican party.

The Vice President's normally talkative staff either was hard to reach or unable to respond to questions. But the night before, press aide Paul Millich denied that the staff had been told to prepare for the Presidency.

Ford was reported to have been told by White House Chief of Staff Alexander Haig Wednesday that he should prepare himself for a transition of power. One of the first tasks facing him would be to select his own Vice President — to complete the first non-elected administration ever.

Legionnaires react to resignation

'We grew up believing the President's right'

by DOUG RAY

There were many up to the very end who didn't believe President Nixon would really quit.

And when he told the country over national television, the bartender said in a low, almost choking voice, "dammit."

At the Arlington Heights American Legion Hall Thursday night, dozens played Bingo while the President told the world he would step aside. At the same time, Legionnaires talked about the man to whom they had given their vote to carry their flag and their thoughts. To them, the fall of Richard M. Nixon was something very chilling.

Minutes before the announcement, Joe Hurley, one of the post officers, wasn't sure the President really would go through with it. "Maybe he'll just step aside for awhile . . . he's a strong man, but when you see these things come out, I just don't know." He shook his head and talked about the man in whom he had placed his trust.

"It's pretty hard to accept this. We grew up with the idea the country is always right and the President, too," said Hurley.

"I'll tell you one thing, Nixon's a good man to have in your corner—at least when it comes to foreign affairs. If Ford comes in, I just hope he'll be a good one. I guess only time will tell."

Then there was H. C. Kibbie, 75, a man who has seen many a president come and go and every year he loses a bit more respect for them all; in fact, all politicians. "Sure I voted for Nixon

. . . I had no other choice because of the other guy."

The end for Richard Nixon finally was announced to the crowd over a public address system, but no one seemed to really take much notice. Four or five persons let out a sigh, or what might be interpreted as a moan, but dozens didn't stop the ritual of their game.

"These Bingo people are a different breed," observes Joe Hurley. He doesn't understand how they can be so unconcerned.

Homeowners declare war on multi-family units

by PAT GERLACH

Militant Schaumburg homeowners opposing continued dense multi-family development declared open war on village officials this week.

"We, along with other homeowners' associations, are going to start the war," Dominick Levita, 1233 Indian Hill Dr., told zoning board members. Levita is past president of Meadow Knolls Homeowners Assn.

He and officials of Lancer Park and Timbercrest homeowners' groups were protesting revised plans for a 60-acre Roselle Road development presented to the zoning board Wednesday by G-S Builders.

THE CONDOMINIUM development would consist of 710 units and include 290 townhomes and 420 apartments in five 6-story buildings.

Levita told zoning board members he purchased a half-acre lot in unincorporated Meadow Knolls several years ago and said his property is now "surrounded by planned unit developments."

He predicted the combined population of the G-S project and Miller Builders' Nantucket Cove, Wise and Roselle roads, would reach "5,000 persons on a little less than 200 acres."

"This is ridiculous, you have no concern for the people," he asserted.

"You are creating a monster called congestion and it is eating us alive," zoners were told by Carol Johnson, president of Timbercrest Homeowners Assn.

Mrs. Johnson said her neighborhood also is concerned with the impact of dense developments, reminding board members she has appeared before them in the past concerning similar development.

SHE SAID HOMEOWNERS' associations are "begging" for consideration and are being met with a cold response. "But we are warm and very emotional and we think enough is enough," she remarked to the applause of approximately 80 persons in the audience.

Earlier in the hearing, Malik Parkash, of Lancer Park Homeowners Assn., voiced objections to the project and presented a petition with 756 signatures of homeowners opposing the plan.

Emphasizing that his group is not "anti-developer, anti-establishment or anti-village," Parkash said they are prepared to continue the fight against dense multiple multi-family development.

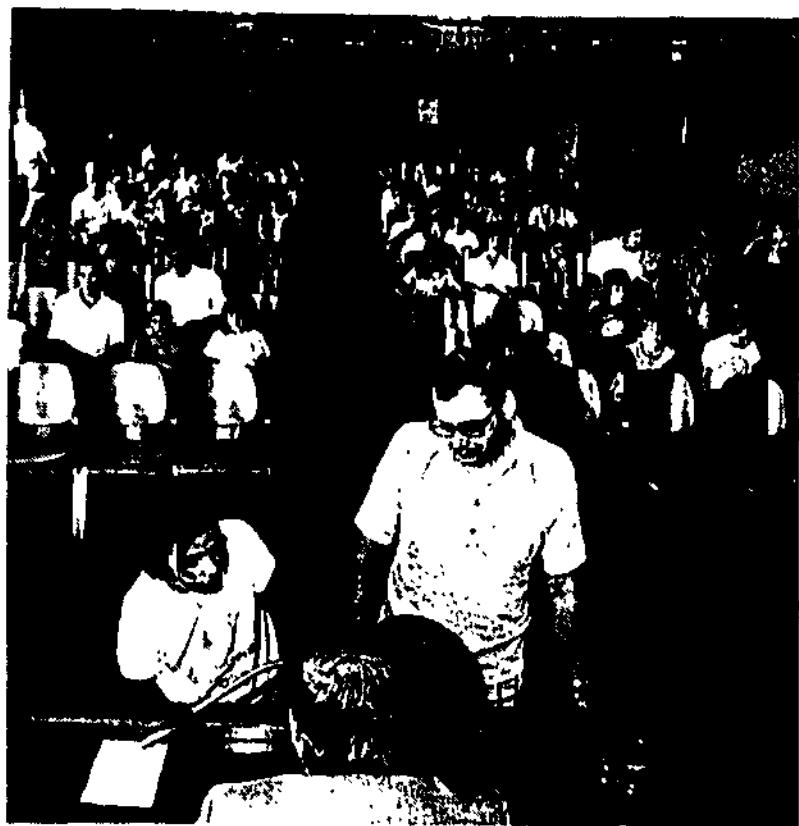

The associations also are circulating petitions calling for a referendum on continued multiple development asking that it be held in conjunction with the April village election.

PRESIDING OVER SCHAUMBURG'S bicycle court is John McGahay, substituting for James Guthrie. "Judge" McGahay handled 45 cases during a recent court session. Offenses include riding on shopping center sidewalks, on the wrong side of streets, or disobeying stop signs.

Young lawbreaker learns lesson, gets another chance

by STIRLING MORITA

An 8-year-old youngster flanked by both parents looked up at the judge, trying to conceal a boyish grin.

"What did they stop you for?" queried the judge.

"Did you do it?" he continued. A lecture followed on the dangers of running a stop sign and about bicycle safety in general.

"I don't want to see you here again," the judge's voice rose above a friendly whisper. "I'll dismiss this, but next time

The boy's grin spread wider, and the three persons exchanged thank-you's with the judge. "Thank you for coming" was the judge's reply to the parents.

THE COURT WAS being held in the courtroom of the Schaumburg branch of Circuit Court in the Great Hall. The proceedings were part of Schaumburg's nine-year bicycle safety program. Children appear in bike court after receiving a ticket for a violation.

The program was Police Chief Martin Conroy's brainchild and one of the first comprehensive programs in the state.

Although authorities cannot show concrete results of the program, the bicycle-riding injury rate in the village speaks for itself. Since the program started, there have been no fatal accidents involving bicycle riders and only 12 injury accidents.

By Yeargin, village licensing officer and a reserve policeman, took over the project eight years ago and has kept it going. He has three reserve officers who go out on their own time and use their own cars and gasoline to patrol the village for bicycle violation offenders, Yeargin said.

He said one of the problems in dealing with bicycle riders is that they do not know they also are subject to the Illinois Rules of the Road.

VILLAGE TRUSTEE James Guthrie has presided as bicycle court judge during the summer months for the last seven years.

"We're pretty fortunate. I think the kids probably are more conscious of the rules of the road when they leave here," said Guthrie, who also is a lawyer.

"Everyone involved is volunteering his own time. That's the whole idea behind the thing," Guthrie added.

"We also believe that if one kid is saved from death or serious injury by this, the time is well spent."

Some offenders are sentenced to write one-page essays about the dangers of their violations and about safety in general. Approximately 45 children attended one session with their parents, and John McGahay, who substituted for Guthrie, sentenced two children to write essays.

ONE OF THE THINGS stressed is that parents attend court with their children, Yeargin said, and the court receives "good" parental cooperation.

Most of the violations involve running stop signs, riding on the wrong side of the road or riding on shopping center sidewalks. There were 17 cases at one session concerning running of stop signs at the intersection of Salem Drive and Weathersfield Way.

If a reserve officer sees a youth committing a violation, he will generally stop the child and write him a "ticket." Persons older than 16 are not tagged with tickets, Robert Rader, a reserve policeman, explained sometimes the child is very young and breaks out crying when stopped. He added that in cases such as that often a lecture will accomplish as much as issuing a ticket.

"The real problem is with adults violating (bicycle) laws," Rader said. "Because of the program, kids seem to be obeying the laws."

He noted the recent surge in popularity of bicycle riding has resulted in more adults pedaling their way through the village and that often it does no good for a child to be stopped on a violation when he sees adults getting away after committing the same offense.

Sent to Bakalis Thursday

Report denies child abuse charges at Dwyer School

by KATHERINE BOYCE
Charges of child abuse at Dwyer School in Arlington Heights are denied in a report sent to State School Supt. Michael Bakalis Thursday by the school's governing board.

The report reaffirms the board's support of John Whipple, former clinical director of Dwyer School, whose certificate for school psychology was suspended Wednesday by Cook County Schools Supt. Richard Martwick.

Martwick suspended the certificate following an investigation of charges of improper operation of the school for emotionally disturbed children. The charges, which came from teachers and former teachers at Dwyer, included child abuse, improper certification of some of the staff at Dwyer and unprofessional activities by some of the staff in the presence of the children.

THURSDAY'S REPORT was prepared following an investigation of the charges by members of the governing board of the Northwest Educational Cooperative

(NEC), which operates Dwyer School.

In its report the board "categorically denies that deliberate use of unusual or excessive force" occurred at the school in recent months and it "reiterates its support of John Whipple as school psychologist and believes results he has obtained with these children attests to his competence in the prescription of proper therapy."

The board acknowledges in the report that "accidental injury" to students and teachers can happen in a school for emotionally disturbed children and that several of the instances of injury to children listed in the charges were caused by accident.

Charges of child abuse have been "exposed to be overstated or fallacious" according to the report and four specific child abuse charges against Whipple were refuted.

THE BOARD ANSWERED the charge of improper certification by saying in the report that it would continue to hire uncertified personnel on a temporary basis

if it could not hire certified staff members. Two uncertified staff members are now employed at Dwyer.

One of the teachers said Thursday she was surprised by portions of the governing board report. The teacher, who asked not to be identified, said there is a fine line between therapeutic and non-therapeutic punishment, but added "Some of what I saw was child abuse." She said she was "100 per cent sure" the charges she made involved child abuse. "I'm sure much of this is open to a great deal of interpretation," she said. "I think this is what the board is trying to do."

Whipple and his attorney are out-of-town and could not be reached for comment. Whipple has until Aug. 16 to appeal the suspension of his certificate to the State Teacher Certification Board. The board can reinstate the certificate, suspend or revoke it.

Officials in Martwick's office and Bakalis's office said they are withholding comment on the NEC report until they have a chance to review it.

Multicon plans to sell village holdings

by NANCY COWGER
Multicon Properties Inc. is on the verge of selling all its holdings in Hoffman Estates, including the Hill Dale Villages apartments, to two different firms, The Herald learned Thursday.

All but a small single-family home section of the 238 acres now owned by Multicon is to be sold to Albert H. Sollinger and Charles G. Strock, partners in land holdings and principle officers of Python Designers-Builders Inc., of Rolling Meadows. Python is their contracting firm for land development.

The single-family home area, now platted for nine homes but proposed for resubdivision to permit 13 homes, is to be sold to The Bigelow Co. Inc., owned by Perry Bigelow of Rolling Meadows.

Sollinger and Strock plan development of a 20-acre recreation center around the Hill Dale Lodge, formerly the Hill Dale Restaurant and before that known as the Dale House Restaurant. The Hill Dale Recreational Center, Inc., is to include 12 indoor tennis courts, four handball courts and two squash courts, in addition to the 18-hole golf course that already exists.

Banquet facilities also will be added to the restaurant, with the dining and recreation structures connected in one major building. The total additional building space will cover about 132,000 square feet.

SOLLINGER AND Strock also plan construction of condominiums and industrial buildings on 83-acres of undeveloped land, including the present rental and management office and a section between Hassell Road and the Northwest Tollway. The acreage to be devoted to each type of development is not yet determined, said Sollinger Thursday.

Multicon is a subsidiary of Bethlehem Steel, which announced last winter it intended to liquidate the Multicon firm. The property has been on the market since then, but the first word of a pending sale came Thursday after inquiries were made about the restaurant, which has been closed for several months. It was reopened last week, with Sean Hartney, a part owner of The Cypress Restaurant in Hinsdale, operating it for Sollinger and Strock and Multicon. Hartney is under contract to continue management of the restaurant after it is sold. If the sale is consummated, said Sollinger.

Bigelow, who custom builds homes in the $60,000 price range, has been scheduled to appear before the village plan commission Aug. 28. A petition has been filed by Multicon for replatting of the nine undeveloped single-family lots south of Hassell and about 250 feet east of the fire station at Hassell and Rose Dale. Bigelow is to purchase the lots if the resubdivision to 13 lots is approved by the village, according to village officials. The information was verified by Bigelow and Ed Glasco, Multicon's regional director.

NO HEARING HAS been scheduled yet for the site plan amendments and possible zoning change that could be required for the Sollinger and Strock proposals. Their land purchase also is on a conditional basis, depending on Multicon's ability to obtain village approval of their new development proposals. A zoning change probably will be required only for an industrial development, said Village Mgr. George Longmeyer, who noted the total Multicon property now is zoned as a planned development. Industrial use is not permitted under that zoning, he said.

The other projects Sollinger and Strock intend would require approval of amendments to the site plan submitted by Multicon and approved by the village board. These also would have to be considered by the village Plan Commission, but it is now too late to schedule them for the Aug. 28 meeting date, said Longmeyer. Neither Sollinger and Strock nor Multicon have filed applications for those hearings, Longmeyer said.

Sollinger and Strock hope to acquire the existing Hill Dale Villages apartments along with the undeveloped lands and the recreation center area, said Sollinger.

Nixon resigns as 37th President; Ford to take oath today at noon

A President steps down . . .

WITH AN AIR of determined optimism, President Nixon said his farewell to the nation Thursday night. Today at noon, he will become a former President of the United States and return to his home in California.

by BOB LAHEY

Richard Milhous Nixon, 37th President of the United States, abdicated his office last night with this final message to the nation:

"May God's grace be with you in all the days ahead."

In a message anticipated since the final devastating evidence of his participation in the Watergate coverup was made public Monday, the President said he would depart his office at noon today, at which time Vice President Gerald Ford will become the 38th President.

NIXON, repeating a familiar phrase that he has "never been a quitter," declared that leaving office is "abhorrent to every instinct in my body." But, he said, he was compelled to put the interests of America first.

He made only veiled references to his misconduct in the aftermath of the Watergate burglary, which led to his becoming the first President ever to abandon his office.

At one point he said he regretted deeply "any injuries" he might have caused the nation. But, he said, "If some of my decisions were wrong—and some were wrong,"—they were made in the belief that they were in the best interests of the nation.

DISPLAYING none of physical signs of stress that have been attributed to him in recent appearances, the President spoke in steady and measured tones, although there was an unmistakable timbre of emotion in his televised comments.

This was evident when he spoke of more than a quarter century of public service and added with obvious reference to the events that led to his departure from office: "Sometimes I have succeeded; sometimes I have failed."

In what was widely described as a conciliatory speech to the nation, Mr. Nixon acknowledged the "great sadness" that his decision to resign caused him. But he expressed confidence in Ford and asked the "understanding, patience, and cooperation of all Americans" for the new President.

NIXON GAVE as the chief reason for his resignation the erosion of support for him in the Congress. That support dis-

Ford silent at first; says he's ready

WASHINGTON (UPI)—A solemn Vice President Gerald R. Ford emerged from a momentous hour-long meeting with President Nixon in the Oval Office Thursday where a White House aide said he was formally informed of the President's intention to resign.

Alone and solemn-faced, Ford strode across the street to seclusion in his own office in the Executive Office Building without speaking to reporters clustered in a light rain on the lawn.

Minutes later, House Democratic Leader Thomas P. O'Neill said Ford will be sworn in as the 38th U.S. President Friday afternoon.

Sec. of State Henry A. Kissinger called on Ford in his office at the Executive Office Building shortly before 2 p.m.

A look at Gerry Ford: his life and our future. Page 9.

CDT. A spokesman said the meeting was arranged at the Vice President's request. FORD HAD BEEN summoned to the White House after completing a medal of honor awards ceremony in nearby Blair House. Reporters swarmed around him as he left there, but he only shook his head at their shouted questions.

Earlier, he had canceled plans for a flying trip to the West Coast and other areas.

Ford had maintained for two days the self-imposed silence he pledged Monday on all questions relating to Nixon, impeachment or resignation.

But in an interview published Thursday in the New York Times, he was asked if he was prepared for the job if it should come about.

"No question about it," Ford was quoted as replying. "I think I have worked real hard . . . I've been to every department, met with the secretary and top staff of every department of government, at their place, not at mine . . . I don't know what more I could have done."

FORD WILL BE the first U.S. President not chosen by popular election. He was selected by Nixon Oct. 12, 1973, to replace Spiro T. Agnew, who resigned after pleading no contest to a charge of tax evasion.

Ford was sworn in as Vice President Dec. 6, and has spent much of his time since then traveling around the nation in an effort to unify and rally the scandal-shattered Republican party.

The Vice President's normally talkative staff either was hard to reach or unable to respond to questions. But the night before, press aide Paul Millich denied that the staff had been told to prepare for the Presidency.

Ford was reported to have been told by White House Chief of Staff Alexander Haig Wednesday that he should prepare himself for a transition of power. One of the first tasks facing him would be to select his own Vice President — to complete the first non-elected administration ever.

Legionnaires react to resignation

'We grew up believing the President's right'

by DOUG RAY

There were many up to the very end who didn't believe President Nixon would really quit.

And when he told the country over national television, the bartender said in a low, almost choking voice, "dammit."

At the Arlington Heights American Legion Hall Thursday night, dozens played Bingo while the President told the world he would step aside. At the same time, Legionnaires talked about the man to whom they had given their vote to carry their flag and their thoughts. To them, the fall of Richard M. Nixon was something very chilling.

Minutes before the announcement, Joe Hurley, one of the post officers, wasn't sure the President really would go through with it. "Maybe he'll just step aside for awhile . . . he's a strong man, but when you see these things come out, I just don't know." He shook his head and talked about the man in whom he had placed his trust.

"It's pretty hard to accept this. We grew up with the idea the country is always right and the President, too," said Hurley.

"I'll tell you one thing, Nixon's a good man to have in your corner—at least when it comes to foreign affairs. If Ford comes in, I just hope he'll be a good one. I guess only time will tell."

Then there was H. C. Kibble, 75, a man who has seen many a president come and go and every year he loses a bit more respect for them all; in fact, all politicians. "Sure I voted for Nixon

. . . I had no other choice because of the other guy."

The end for Richard Nixon finally was announced to the crowd over a public address system, but no one seemed to really take much notice. Four or five persons let out a sigh, or what might be interpreted as a moan, but dozens didn't stop the ritual of their game.

"These Bingo people are a different breed," observes Joe Hurley. He doesn't understand how they can be so unconcerned.

Yes, that WAS Santa Claus

If you thought you saw Santa Claus walking down the street last Saturday night, you weren't seeing things! Chances are, it was Don Lett of South Maple Street on his way to a "Christmas in July" party (even though it is already August) at Verna and Rogor Street's home at 22 S. Elm Street.

Verna decided to have the slightly off-beat gathering because, "It's always so busy in December. I just don't have the time then for a big gathering. Now, I do."

Christmas party type invitations were sent to about 40 close friends who attended. The guests got into the spirit of the thing and most arrived wearing bright red or green outfits.

The Streetz home was totally Christmas decorated inside and out. There were outside lights, decorative Santas in the windows, a fully decorated Christmas tree. Christmas music was played.

There was even a grab bag gift exchange with Santa Lett distributing the items. Christmas carols were sung by all.

A large Christmas type buffet table topped off the evening and was complete with Christmas cookies and a poinsettia decorated cake.

A NEW BOOK, recently donated to the Mount Prospect Public Library, is "The Orthodox Church" by Timothy Ware. It comes from the Women's Club of Holy Resurrection Orthodox Church of Mount Prospect.

The book is a small paperback crammed with the history, faith and worship of the Orthodox Church.

Holy Resurrection has services at Prospect High School each Sunday morning. For more information about the congregation, call Father Dimitri Cozby at 398-7927.

GIRL SCOUT TROOP 370 of Fairview School will be having a paper drive early in September and are encouraging people to save their newspapers until then. A large blue truck will be in the school parking lot at 300 N. Fairview on Saturday, Sept. 7 for those who can deliver the papers. Home pickup on the day of the drive can be arranged by calling 239-2155 or 239-8769.

AT THE RECENT Leaders-Mothers luncheon of the local Camp Fire Girls, a leader from each level of the organization was named "Leader of the Year."

Louanne Gatsch was named Bluebird Leader of the Year; Charlene Tokar, Adventure Club Leader; Jean Baris, Discovery Club; and Joan Frey, Horizon Club.

Outgoing Leader's Assn. Chairman Ann Carpenter presented her coworkers with giant-sized beads, symbolic of work they had done with and for her.

The luncheon was held at Le Gourmet Restaurant on Rand Rd. The New Dimension singers from Forest View High School presented a program of song.

'A reasonable proposal'

Mayor backs Rob Roy development

by MARCIA KRAMER
Mount Prospect Mayor Robert D. Teichert said Thursday he supports the general concept of plans to develop 2,350 apartment and condominium units on the Rob Roy Golf Course.

Saying it is "not realistic" that the 200-acre course could remain undeveloped, the mayor described the plans submitted by Kenroy Inc., Skokie, as "a reasonable proposal."

"The concept of the development — the density, saving open space — is not unreasonable," he said. "Whether I would vote for the specific plan would depend on that plan."

The mayor's comments — his first public pronouncement on the development plans — came a day after the village's zoning board of appeals voted to recommend that the village board turn down the Kenroy bid to annex the property to Mount Prospect and rezone it for multifamily use.

Other village board members have expressed cautious endorsement of the Kenroy plans, with reservations about the retention of a golf course.

TEICHERT, WHILE supporting the concept of the plans, indicated he would be willing to uphold the zoning board's recommendation and let Kenroy seek rezoning in Cook County.

"The zoning board has indicated basically they don't want it in town," he said. "I go for a more practical approach on things. There is a piece of empty land there that is not in Mount Prospect. It's going to be developed. What we're really talking about is should it be developed in Mount Prospect or in the county. As I read the vote, it should be in the county. I'm about at that point myself. We should wipe our hands clean of the thing and let happen whatever happens."

Kenroy officials have stated that if their attempt to annex the golf course to Mount Prospect fails, they would turn to the county in an effort to rezone the property. It lies east of Wheeling Road between Camp McDonald Road and Euclid Avenue in unincorporated Wheeling Township.

MUCH OF THE zoning board's discussion of the project Wednesday night was based on conditions tentatively arranged by Kenroy. Among them: Dist. 26 would receive $168,000 from the developer provided a referendum to build a school passes and land is acquired from River Trails Park District; and the park district would be given title to about half the property to retain an 18-hole golf course, provided a $1.2 million general obligation bond referendum passes and the district markets another $1 million in revenue bonds.

Teichert denounced both deals as "blackmail," noting that homeowners are not asked to make contributions as a condition of annexation or zoning. "I'm not voting for something just because they're going to give money. We don't build the community based on what the school district says it needs."

He described opponents to the development as "not talking about saving a golf course; they're talking about fighting apartments." As for retaining Rob Roy as a golf course, Teichert said: "We're overloaded with golf courses. We already have two for the community; Christ, how many can you support?"

Having a wedding?

See the library

Prospective brides and grooms can get help in planning their weddings at the Mount Prospect Library, where books on wedding and shower planning are now available.

Included in the collection are Nick Hodson's "The Joyful Wedding," Wendy Wall's "The Creative Wedding," Khoren Arisian's "The New Wedding," Arthur Dobrin and Kenneth Briggs' "Getting Married the Way You Want," Margaret Gleeson's "The Complete Shower Party Book," Ginny Hopkins' "The Bride's Book of Showers," and "McCall's Engagement and Wedding Guide" by the editors of McCall's Magazine.

Voter registration open

Residents of the areas recently annexed to Mount Prospect are urged to reregister to vote prior to the Nov. 5 election.

Even though residents may have registered previously while they lived in unincorporated Wheeling or Elk Grove townships, they must register again now that they live in Mount Prospect, according to Village Clerk Donald W. Goodman.

Registration will close Sept. 20 for the November election. Registration is being conducted at Mount Prospect Village Hall, 112 E. Northwest Hwy., from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday; Elk Grove Township Hall, 2400 S. Arlington Heights Rd., Arlington Heights, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday and 9 a.m. to noon Saturday; and Wheeling Township Hall, 1818 E. Northwest Hwy., Arlington Heights, 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Newly annexed areas include the Prospect Meadows subdivision and several apartment complexes northwest of Busse and Algonquin roads.

Blood drive off to its best start

The Mount Prospect village blood drive got off to its fastest start toward a quarterly goal this week when 74 residents donated blood.

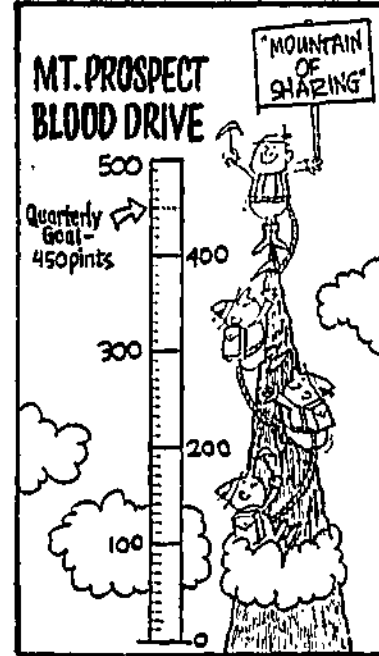

Norma Murauskis, volunteer chairman, called the turnout at Wednesday night's drawing "great. It's a fantastic turnout for August, which is noted as a bad month" because of vacations, allergies and the like.

A total of 84 residents went to the drawing, but 10 were ruled ineligible to give blood because of colds and other temporary conditions.

The village's quarterly goal is 450 pints, or 150 at each monthly drawing. Though the 74 pints raised this month is only half the monthly goal, Mrs. Murauskis noted that it is higher than previous drawings.

The quarterly goals have been set up toward the village's annual goal of 1,800 pints — a figure that represents 4 per cent of the village's population.

The next drawing has been scheduled for 4 to 9 p.m. Sept. 4 at the Mount Prospect Country Club, 600 S. See-Gwan Ave. Donors must be at least 18 years of age and in good health.

Appointments for the drawing can be arranged by calling 392-6000 or 439-9727.

Mount Prospect village officials and officers of the Mount Prospect State Bank apparently are close to completing arrangements for the village to buy the bank building for administrative offices.

Mayor Robert D. Teichert said he expects the deal to be consummated "in a matter of weeks — certainly in September and possibly in August."

"We're close to a negotiated purchase, I would think, of some properties which would include the bank," he said.

RICHARD M. PADULA, bank president, confirmed that talks have taken place, and said: "We're in tentative agreement at this point."

No costs have been disclosed, but Teichert indicated the price tag is "less than $1 million."

The village has expressed interest in obtaining the bank property at 15 E. Busse Ave. since the bank announced plans several months ago to build a new bank just east of the present facility.

The modern, two-story bank building was constructed in 1959 and was expanded in 1964. The bank is erecting its new building to provide additional space.

The bank is the second major downtown parcel the village is negotiating to buy. The village also is attempting to purchase the 2.6-acre Central School property at Central Road and Main Street, for use as a public library.

Teichert hinted that other pieces of property also may be on the village's list for acquisition, but did not specify their location.

Parents delay boundary change recommendations

by BOB GALLAS

Angry Elk Grove Township Dist. 59 parents have forced the boundary committee to delay recommendations on changes which would send Mount Prospect elementary school children into Des Plaines schools.

About 20 parents from Brentwood and High Ridge Knolls schools in Des Plaines turned out at a boundary committee meeting Tuesday which was originally called to draw up a final recommendation on changes for the board of education.

However, by the time the meeting was over, parents from the two schools had succeeded in delaying the recommendation while gaining representation on the committee.

Committee chairman Nita Stamm said meetings are planned which will look at enrollment of seven schools. The first such meeting was scheduled for last night.

Mrs. Stamm voted against delaying the recommendation and also against seating representatives from the two Des Plaines Schools on the committee. She later accused parents from the schools of having the wrong motives for being against the boundary shift.

"Let's face it, they just don't want blacks or apartment kids going to their school," said Mrs. Stamm. "It doesn't matter if the kids go to any other school as long as it's not theirs," said Mrs. Stamm.

Village zoning committee may enter Liebling case

The Wheeling Road Zoning Committee will attempt to intervene next week in the court annexation battle over 40 acres owned by Arnold Liebling near the northeast corner of Wheeling and Camp McDonald roads.

If the committee is permitted to intervene, as Liebling was so permitted in 1971, it would open the possibility of a rehearing of the case or an appeal filed by the homeowners group.

Circuit Court Judge Raymond K. Berg on July 16 ruled that the Village of Wheeling's 1971 annexation of the Liebling property was proper and that the lawsuit fighting the annexation had been filed too late (about 45 days after annexation) by the State's Attorney's office.

The State's Attorney's office represented the Wheeling Road Zoning Committee in contesting the annexation.

AT A POST-TRIAL conference Thursday, Ralph Berkowitz of the State's Attorney's office told members of the Wheeling Road Zoning Committee that a decision had not yet been made on whether the State's Attorney's office would appeal Judge Berg's decision. The deadline for such an appeal is Aug. 15.

Wheeling Road Zoning Committee member Max Lyle told Berkowitz, "If we are not allowed to intervene, we will fully expect the State's Attorney's office to seek a rehearing or an appeal."

The homeowners have fought the Liebling annexation primarily because of the apartment zoning Wheeling had given Liebling shortly after the annexation. Their legal objection was that the annexation was illegal because the property is adjacent to Wheeling only at one point.

Berkowitz said he had expected a compromise agreement to be accepted by both sides before Berg ruled and he said there are hopes an agreement is still possible. "We still are interested, if possible, to work out a settlement," he said, speaking for the State's Attorney's office.

Instruments stolen

Some $3,000 worth of musical instruments were reported taken recently from the car of a Mount Prospect man.

Ronald Schuler, 1613 Dogwood Ln., told Cook County Sheriff's police the equipment was stolen from his car while it was parked behind Landers Chlet, Ill. Rte. 72 and Oakton St., Elk Grove Township, between 1 and 3 a.m.

Reported missing were an accordion, saxophone and amplifier equipment.

Sent to Bakalis Thursday

Report denies child abuse charges at Dwyer School

by KATHERINE DOYCE

Charges of child abuse at Dwyer School in Arlington Heights are denied in a report sent to State School Supt. Michael Bakalis Thursday by the school's governing board.

The report reaffirms the board's support of John Whipple, former clinical director of Dwyer School, whose certificate for school psychology was suspended Wednesday by Cook County Schools Supt. Richard Martwick.

Martwick suspended the certificate following an investigation of charges of improper operation of the school for emotionally disturbed children. The charges, which came from teachers and former teachers at Dwyer, included child abuse, improper certification of some of the staff at Dwyer and unprofessional activities by some of the staff in the presence of the children.

THURSDAY'S REPORT was prepared following an investigation of the charges by members of the governing board of the Northwest Educational Cooperative

(NEC), which operates Dwyer School.

In its report the board "categorically denies that deliberate use of unusual or excessive force" occurred at the school in recent months and it "reiterates its support of John Whipple as school psychologist and believes results he has obtained with these children attest to his competence in the prescription of proper therapy."

The board acknowledges in the report that "accidental injury" to students and teachers can happen in a school for emotionally disturbed children and that several of the instances of injury to children listed in the charges were caused by accident.

Charges of child abuse have been "exposed to be overstated or fallacious" according to the report and four specific child abuse charges against Whipple were refuted.

THE BOARD ANSWERED the charge of improper certification by saying in the report that it would continue to hire uncertified personnel on a temporary basis

if it could not hire certified staff members. Two uncertified staff members are now employed at Dwyer.

One of the teachers said Thursday she was surprised by portions of the governing board report. The teacher, who asked not to be identified, said there is a fine line between therapeutic and non-therapeutic punishment, but added "Some of what I saw was child abuse." She said she was "100 per cent sure" the charges she made involved child abuse. "I'm sure much of this is open to a great deal of interpretation," she said. "I think this is what the board is trying to do."

Whipple and his attorney are out-of-town and could not be reached for comment. Whipple has until Aug. 16 to appeal the suspension of his certificate to the State Teacher Certification Board. The board can reinstate the certificate, suspend or revoke it.

Officials in Martwick's office and Bakalis's office said they are withholding comment on the NEC report until they have a chance to review it.

Bomb destroys car in Rolling Meadows

by STEVE FORSYTH

Rolling Meadows police are seeking possible motives for an explosion that obliterated a parked car and damaged several others Wednesday night.

Police Chief Lewis Case said a high charge of explosive was placed in the open car at 5200 Carriageway Dr. in the Three Fountains apartment complex. No one was injured in the blast, which occurred at 10:40 p.m., but pieces of glass and metal were found several hundred feet away from the site.

The owner of the 1963 Buick destroyed in the blast was James Lazarus, 2505 Birch Ln., Rolling Meadows. However, he had loaned the car for some time to his son-in-law and daughter, Michael and Patricia Doyle, who reside at 5200 Carriageway Dr.

The impact of the explosion shattered several windows of the apartment building facing the parking lot, and threw the roof of the car over the top of the three-story building. It landed in the street on the other side.

LAZARUS SAID he could think of no one who would have a grudge against his family. There also is speculation that someone could have been angry with the apartment management firm, but police have confirmed none of those motives.

Lazarus' 16-year-old son, Michael, who was visiting his sister, was just about to walk out the patio doors of the apartment to his car in the parking lot when the blast occurred. Another family had parked next to the bombed vehicle moments before the explosion, but was inside the building when it came.

Witnesses said there was a bright flash, but no fire. One bystander said he could smell gunpowder afterwards. Case said the bomb could have been made with dynamite, but there has been no determination yet. He said fragments of the car have been sent to Washington, D.C., for analysis by the U.S. Treasury Dept.

Case and an officer from the Chicago police bomb squad sifted through the rubble until 3:30 a.m. looking for clues. Despite the other damage, Case said an unbroken bottle of soda pop was found under the car.

THE EXPLOSION was lessened somewhat because the car windows were open, Case said. He theorized that the explosion force went through the bottom of the car, bounced off the pavement and went back through the car, lifting the roof off.

The vacuum created by the blast prevented a fire, Case said. Lazarus said the gasoline tank was full at the time of the explosion.

A gasoline tank on another car exploded about three weeks ago in the same lot, but Case said there was no evidence to indicate it was started by a bomb. He said it could have been the result of overflowing gasoline ignited by something. Police have not connected the two incidents.

NO ONE WAS in the immediate area at the time of the Wednesday night blast and no one was injured in the apartment building, although pictures were shaken off the walls, closet shelves were dumped and the windows were shattered. The explosion was heard in most of Rolling Meadows and parts of Arlington Heights.

As other apartment residents examined the damage Thursday morning, one woman said, "My paintings all fell off the wall and my door is jammed." She looked at her own new car, covered with bits of glass, and added, "I'm getting out of here."

Case said his department is tracking down whatever leads it can get, while awaiting the bomb report from Washington. There was no estimate of total damage.

Nixon resigns as 37th President; Ford to take oath today at noon

A President steps down . . .

WITH AN AIR of determined optimism, President Nixon said his farewell to the nation Thursday night. Today at noon, he will become a former President of the United States and return to his home in California.

by BOB LAHEY

Richard Milhous Nixon, 37th President of the United States, abdicated his office last night with this final message to the nation:

"May God's grace be with you in all the days ahead."

In a message anticipated since the final devastating evidence of his participation in the Watergate coverup was made public Monday, the President said he would depart his office at noon today, at which time Vice President Gerald Ford will become the 38th President.

NIXON, repeating a familiar phrase that he has "never been a quitter," declared that leaving office is "abhorrent to every instinct in my body." But, he said, he was compelled to put the interests of America first.

He made only veiled references to his misconduct in the aftermath of the Watergate burglary, which led to his becoming the first President ever to abandon his office.

At one point he said he regretted deeply "any injuries" he might have caused the nation. But, he said, "If some of my decisions were wrong—and some were wrong,"—they were made in the belief that they were in the best interests of the nation.

DISPLAYING none of physical signs of stress that have been attributed to him in recent appearances, the President spoke in steady and measured tones, although there was an unmistakable timbre of emotion in his televised comments.

This was evident when he spoke of more than a quarter century of public service and added with obvious reference to the events that led to his departure from office: "Sometimes I have succeeded; sometimes I have failed."

In what was widely described as a conciliatory speech to the nation, Mr. Nixon acknowledged the "great sadness" that his decision to resign caused him. But he expressed confidence in Ford and asked the "understanding, patience, and cooperation of all Americans" for the new President.

NIXON GAVE as the chief reason for his resignation the erosion of support for him in the Congress. That support dis-

Ford silent at first; says he's ready

WASHINGTON (UPI)—A solemn Vice President Gerald R. Ford emerged from a momentous hour-long meeting with President Nixon in the Oval Office Thursday where a White House aide said he was formally informed of the President's intention to resign.

Alone and solemn-faced, Ford strode across the street to seclusion in his own office in the Executive Office Building without speaking to reporters clustered in a light rain on the lawn.

Minutes later, House Democratic Leader Thomas P. O'Neill said Ford will be sworn in as the 38th U.S. President Friday afternoon.

Sec. of State Henry A. Kissinger called on Ford in his office at the Executive Office Building shortly before 2 p.m.

A look at Gerry Ford: his life and our future. Page 9.

C.D.T. A spokesman said the meeting was arranged at the Vice President's request.

FORD HAD BEEN summoned to the White House after completing a medal of honor awards ceremony in nearby Blair House. Reporters swarmed around him as he left there, but he only shook his head at their shouted questions.

Earlier, he had canceled plans for a flying trip to the West Coast and other areas.

Ford had maintained for two days the self-imposed silence he pledged Monday on all questions relating to Nixon, impeachment or resignation.

But in an interview published Thursday in the New York Times, he was asked if he was prepared for the job if it should come about.

"No question about it," Ford was quoted as replying. "I think I have worked real hard . . . I've been to every department, met with the secretary and top staff of every department of government, at their place, not at mine . . . I don't know what more I could have done."

FORD WILL BE the first U.S. President not chosen by popular election. He was selected by Nixon Oct. 12, 1973, to replace Spiro T. Agnew, who resigned after pleading no contest to a charge of tax evasion.

Ford was sworn in as Vice President Dec. 6, and has spent much of his time since then traveling around the nation in an effort to unify and rally the scandal-shattered Republican party.

The Vice President's normally talkative staff either was hard to reach or unable to respond to questions. But the night before, press aide Paul Hiltich denied that the staff had been told to prepare for the Presidency.

Ford was reported to have been told by White House Chief of Staff Alexander Haig Wednesday that he should prepare himself for a transition of power. One of the first tasks facing him would be to select his own Vice President — to complete the first non-elected administration ever.

Legionnaires react to resignation

'We grew up believing the President's right'

by DOUG RAY

There were many up to the very end who didn't believe President Nixon would really quit.

And when he told the country over national television, the bartender said in a low, almost choking voice, "dammit."

At the Arlington Heights American Legion Hall Thursday night, dozens played Bingo while the President told the world he would step aside. At the same time, Legionnaires talked about the man to whom they had given their vote to carry their flag and their thoughts. To them, the fall of Richard M. Nixon was something very chilling.

Minutes before the announcement, Joe Hurley, one of the post officers, wasn't sure the President really would go through with it. "Maybe he'll just step aside for awhile . . . he's a strong man, but when you see these things come out, I just don't know." He shook his head and talked about the man in whom he had placed his trust.

"It's pretty hard to accept this. We grew up with the idea the country is always right and the President, too," said Hurley.

"I'll tell you one thing, Nixon's a good man to have in your corner—at least when it comes to foreign affairs. If Ford comes in, I just hope he'll be a good one. I guess only time will tell."

Then there was H. C. Kibbie, 75, a man who has seen many a president come and go and every year he loses a bit more respect for them all; in fact, all politicians. "Sure I voted for Nixon

. . . I had no other choice because of the other guy."

The end for Richard Nixon finally was announced to the crowd over a public address system, but no one seemed to really take much notice. Four or five persons let out a sigh, or what might be interpreted as a moan, but dozens didn't stop the ritual of their game.

"These Bingo people are a different breed," observes Joe Hurley. He doesn't understand how they can be so unconcerned.

Bomb rips parked car in Meadows

by STEVE FORSYTH

Rolling Meadows police are seeking possible motives for an explosion that obliterated a parked car and damaged several others Wednesday night.

Police Chief Lewis Case said a high charge of explosive was placed in the open car at 5200 Carriageway Dr. in the Three Fountains apartment complex. No one was injured in the blast, which occurred at 10:40 p.m., but pieces of glass and metal were found several hundred feet away from the site.

AN UNDETERMINED amount of explosives destroyed this auto Wednesday night in a parking lot at 5200 Carriageway Dr., Rolling Meadows. Several nearby cars and an apartment building were also damaged by the 10:40 p.m. blast. Police are seeking a motive for the crime. No persons were injured.

Water mains leak in two areas here

Broken and leaking water lines were reported in two separate areas of Arlington Heights Thursday.

Public works crews were reported repairing a 10-inch water main broken Wednesday during construction work on Davis Street.

Earlier, a service line was reported leaking in the 600 block of N. Dunton Avenue by residents on the street.

Assistant Public Works Director Bill Reinhard said repair of the leaking service line was delayed because of the priority work on the Davis Street main.

In addition, an extra number of public works employees have been assigned to street resurfacing projects, Reinhard said, as the village tries to catch up on repaving that had been delayed by the summer's cement truckdrivers' strike.

Softball tourney here

Pioneer Park in Arlington Heights will be the scene Sunday for the state 12-inch girls' slow-pitch softball tournament sponsored by the Illinois Parks and Recreation Society.

Eight teams, including Arlington Heights, have survived the district competition and will advance to the finals Sunday beginning with two games at 10:30 a.m. Two games will be played at noon, two more at 1:30 p.m. and the championship contest will be played at 3 p.m.

Sent to Bakalis Thursday

Report denies child abuse charges at Dwyer School

by KATHERINE BOYCE

Charges of child abuse at Dwyer School in Arlington Heights are denied in a report sent to State School Supt. Michael Bakalis Thursday by the school's governing board.

The report reaffirms the board's support of John Whipple, former clinical director of Dwyer School, whose certificate for school psychology was suspended Wednesday by Cook County Schools Supt. Richard Martwick.

Martwick suspended the certificate following an investigation of charges of improper operation of the school for emotionally disturbed children. The charges, which came from teachers and former teachers at Dwyer, included child abuse, improper certification of some of the staff at Dwyer and unprofessional activities by some of the staff in the presence of the children.

THURSDAY'S REPORT was prepared following an investigation of the charges by members of the governing board of the Northwest Educational Cooperative

(NEC), which operates Dwyer School.

In its report the board "categorically denies that deliberate use of unusual or excessive force" occurred at the school in recent months and it "reiterates its support of John Whipple as school psychologist and believes results he has obtained with these children attests to his competence in the prescription of proper therapy."

The board acknowledges in the report that "accidental injury" to students and teachers can happen in a school for emotionally disturbed children and that several of the instances of injury to children listed in the charges were caused by accident.

Charges of child abuse have been "exposed to be overstated or fallacious" according to the report and four specific child abuse charges against Whipple were refuted.

THE BOARD ANSWERED the charge of improper certification by saying in the report that it would continue to hire uncertified personnel on a temporary basis

if it could not hire certified staff members. Two uncertified staff members are now employed at Dwyer.

One of the teachers said Thursday she was surprised by portions of the governing board report. The teacher, who asked not to be identified, said there is a fine line between therapeutic and non-therapeutic punishment, but added "Some of what I saw was child abuse." She said she was "100 per cent sure" the charges she made involved child abuse. "I'm sure much of this is open to a great deal of interpretation," she said. "I think this is what the board is trying to do."

Whipple and his attorney are out-of-town and could not be reached for comment. Whipple has until Aug. 16 to appeal the suspension of his certificate to the State Teacher Certification Board. The board can reinstate the certificate, suspend or revoke it.

Officials in Martwick's office and Bakalis's office said they are withholding comment on the NEC report until they have a chance to review it.

Miracle needed to revive arts center

by JOE SWICKARD

A news analysis

They beat dead horses, didn't they. Barring a miracle, it appears as though Joseph Weber's assessment of building a cultural center in Arlington Heights was correct. Weber, former chairman of the cultural commission, said as he stepped down, "I don't see any reason to go on whipping a dead horse."

Sidney Rosenfeld, the current chairman, took control of the commission and showed all the signs of making the dead horse gallop. At Wednesday night's meeting, however, it became clear that the 10-year-old dream of building an arts center of revolutionary design stands little chance of becoming a reality.

The prevailing mood Wednesday was one of depression reinforced with more bad news.

Rosenfeld reported on his appeal to George C. Izenour for money and help. It was Izenour, the world renowned theater consultant from Yale, who proposed the radical design of the center with expanding seating capacity and fold-away walls.

Izenour's response was an enclosure of a letter from the Ford Foundation. Izenour wrote that the foundation's letter spoke for itself. It did and the word was a polite "no."

THE NEXT BLOW came with the announcement that a two-month effort to raise money for an architect would only scrape together $2,600. The direct mail appeal to business and professional men of the village hopefully would have netted $50,000.

Commissioners spoke wearily of being turned down, put off and sometimes strung along. Times are bad, they were told, to be asking for donations.

Dr. E. Jesse Jacobs, a cultural commission member, sadly admitted, "I was just plain wrong. I thought this would be easy."

Rosenfeld concurred, "Evidently this is not a good time to raise money — period."

The site for the center is drawing more than passing glances from the library across the street. Library board president Richard Frisbie had sent a letter denying his group was trying to "undermine" the center by studying the land as a possible place for expanding the facility.

Frisbie wrote, "We just want to be sure the library is next in line" for at least part of the site if the commission fails.

Rosenfeld noted that although there is no time limit placed on the land, paid for with village funds, "... the pressure is starting to mount."

EVEN THE PURCHASE of the land with village funds has raised some questions of propriety. The use of land dedication funds for part of the property was termed "highly questionable" by Rutherford Platt, former attorney for the Open Lands Project, Chicago, and now professor at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst.

Land dedication funds are monies donated by developers to offset the impact of the increased population on village, park and school services.

Platt said he had "never heard" of such funds used in this manner and the question would make "an interesting test case."

Rosenfeld told the commission it was time to pull out all the stops and hit the "big guys" — wealthy families, individuals and corporations with ties or roots in the northwest suburbs.

The "big guys" were going to be saved until the architect's models, plans and drawings were completed. After all, Rosenfeld had said, "It's hard to sell a dream without something concrete."

NOW, ROSENFELD said, is the time to go for broke. "At this point we have nothing to lose. Nothing at all," he said.

Other options exist if the appeals fail, the other commissioners said. They could throw their support to other established groups and "provide fertile ground" for culture in the suburbs or they could "hibernate until the climate is better."

Dr. Jacobs said that it was time to "fish or cut bait." If the big fish don't bite, the commission will have exercised its options.
